Town must continue to fight CHL

To the Editor:

Cohasset Heights Ltd. filed a civil suit in Superior Court against the Board of Health and the town of Cohasset May 31. CHL claims that the board and the town improperly denied the site assignment application for its landfill expansion. Cohasset has until June 20 to respond.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Now is the time for Cohasset to continue to aggressively oppose this expansion.

CHL's complaint is filled with ludicrous assertions and misstatements, but the two that truly stand out to the laymen who have tried to follow the legal shenanigans are CHL's claims that no offsite pollution has occurred in the past 20 years and that the current landfill has had no violations in its history! Anyone who attended or watched the hearings knows that these statements are simply false.

It is beyond comprehension, that CHL and its board of directors can't understand that the town of Cohasset wants to zealously protect its water supply, its natural beauty and the air its citizens breathe. Cohasset clearly followed the site assignment regulations and allowed extensive testimony from both the landfill operators and opponents. After countless hours of testimony and weeks of deliberations by the Board of Health, the town rightfully denied the expansion application.

I strongly urge the town to continue its opposition to the landfill expansion. Everyone is sick and tired of hearing about an issue that should have been dead years ago, but as soon as the citizens of Cohasset relax their guards, CHL will push its expansion through and we'll be living with the repercussions forever. Please support our town's efforts to oppose the landfill expansion — now is no time to back down!

Don't miss the parade!

To the Editor:

Tuesday, June 4, I attended a band practice; as an observer not a participant. If only Norman Rockwell could have been there! I am sure that the July or August cover of The Saturday Evening Post, if published, would feature Cohasset's marching band.

What a sight! On the snare drum, an owner of a plumbing business provided the counterpoint while in the flute section, a novelist whistled (?) away. The youngest member of the band in the trumpet section is a sixth-grader and the oldest, wielding the cymbals, is in his 70s. A minister tinkles the Glockenspiel. Another member of the flute section is a Deer Hill teacher and her husband, an architect, draws parabolas in the air as the conductor. The trombone section features an MD and an attorney.

Also in the trumpet section is a man who hasn't played in 35 years and a young lady in the 10th grade. One of the members of the saxophone section also hasn't played in a while, 32 years, and the other saxophone is in the hands of an eighth-grader. The clarinet section includes a member of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra and a retired electrical engineer. The beat is provided by the bass drum manned by a man who also is a tenor in the Unicorn Singers in his spare time.

Behind every organization is the guiding spirit who in this case is a member of the flute section, a mother with a law degree and an organizer. Her husband and two children joined me in the audience.

Even though this was the first practice, it went off without a hitch under the direction of Steve Biagini, the Deer Hill music teacher. The music was great.

A closer look at the members of the band shows the strong influence of the First Parish Church. Thanks for the idea, Ed.

The Harborfest parade is billed as a "small town" parade, and this band is the epitome of what we had in mind. Don't miss the parade; you are in for a great time.

Class told to treasure past but look to future

turn to dream things that never were and say, why not."

Salutatorian Tafana Alma Fiore said after 12 long years, graduation day was one to treasure.

"Focus on today, today is a day to celebrate because we deserve it," she said. "Be proud of yourself and every person sitting around you — savor every moment of this day."

Then in a moving personal touch to her address, Fiore paid a special tribute to her mother, thanking her for being there to support her along the way.

Valedictorian Ryan Sawchuk thanked teachers for making him think and question authority. He singled out his Latin teacher, Thomas O'Neil, for special recognition as someone who made a difference in his life.

'Be proud of yourself and every person sitting around you — savor every moment of this day.'

— Tafana Fiore, salutatorian.

"If we were stumped by a word, he'd ask us to figure it out for ourselves," Sawchuk recalled. "He told us, think for yourself, trust yourself, and you'll be fine."

Sawchuk said O'Neil taught that "your mind is precious. Wealth, power, may come and go, but no one can take away your mind — your ability to think freely."

Kidder noted that there is no shooting war today that America is involved in and that the economy is working.

But he cautioned that the problems the world faces are complex and will need the graduates' full attention.

Kidder cited rapid population growth in undeveloped countries, the challenges of a global economy, ecological minefields in places such as the Brazilian rain forest and Eastern Europe, and the ethical and moral challenges in public and private life, as critical areas of concern for the future.

He also stressed the graduates should take pride in their accomplishments. Echoing his earlier comments about how this generation is expected to have to change careers several times, he wished graduates well.

"Enjoy great success with whatever you do next and whatever you do next after that," he said.

Deer Hill School principal ousted from post

Asked to clarify how Hartlage could have taken actions to restore normalcy while suspended, Hart would only say "there were things she could have done."

In a previous interview, Kidder described Hartlage's suspension without pay as an "extremely harsh" penalty.

In expanding on those remarks this week, he said suspension for cause for a person in a job like a school principal is "likely to mean very difficult roads ahead with respect to their career."

Kidder backed Hart's decision to suspend Hartlage.

"At the time, Steve was convinced it was the right punishment."

Friday's letter announcing Hartlage's dismissal from her principal's post, was signed by all five members of the school committee and the superintendent.

Under the three-year-old state education reform law, superintendents and not school committees have the power to hire and fire principals.

Kidder said Monday that the school committee signed the letter to show parents that the entire school department leadership is "on the same page" on this matter.

When questioned by Det. Rick Grassie, who investigated the incident following a report from a friend of the alleged victim, a fourth-grader, who came to the station — Hartlage denied hitting anyone but said she had verbally reprimanded a child.

Neither Hartlage, who has been on leave since the incident, nor her attorney could not be reached for comment.

Hartlage, a Plymouth resident, was hired last June to replace long-time principal Kenneth Ekberg, who took an early retirement.

Farmers' market may come to town

"I got the idea after driving seniors on the senior shuttle to the farmers' market in Hingham," Abbruzzese said.

Cohasset farmer David Bigley of White Cedar Farm is very enthusiastic. Bigley and his wife Alix White have already committed to participating.

"We're excited about it," Bigley said. "Anytime someone can get fresh produce directly from the people who grew it, it's terrific."

Bigley also noted that the Farmers' Market will be a great way to promote foot traffic in the village.

Farmers' tables and stands would be at the south end of the town parking lot so the market would be visible from South Main Street.

Rizzo said shop owners would be encouraged to stay open late on market evenings, which may also feature folk music.

Plans are to make the market an annual event.

"Hopefully next year farmers will be aware of our market and plant for it," Abbruzzese said. "And we might get some of the same farmers that do the Hingham one."

Rizzo said if the market is a hit "we'll definitely do it next year and start earlier (in the spring)."

Hedlund goes online with Internet

Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) has entered the age of the Internet, establishing his own web site, which will allow his constituents to take a look at what is going on in the state Senate and throughout the South Shore via their personal computers.

People who log onto:

will learn what bills are before the committees that Hedlund serves. There will also be a link which updates legislation sponsored by the senator. Information on frequently asked questions will be available for interested constituents as well as a link outlining upcoming events both at the State House and in the district.

"This web site will broaden access to my office and open up an entirely new medium for me to communicate with South Shore constituents," Hedlund stated.

Besides the information on the web site, constituents will be able to E-Mail Hedlund with their questions and concerns.

For those wishing to contact Sen. Hedlund via computer, the E-Mail address is Hedlund@gis.net.

"I am still available by telephone (722-1646), which I still believe is an easier means of access!" Hedlund said.

Greenbush means 'green' for Cohasset

To the Editor:

Concerns over re-vitalizing our downtown area and the ongoing railroad debate got me to thinking the other day. Then I hit on the solution to our town's problems. I was foolish to worry about train noise, pollution and safety issues when all that time the answer was right there. Greenbush means "green" for Cohasset!

We should urge our selectmen to lobby the MBTA for the Greenbush layover facility. Yes, think about it. With such a facility in our midst, it would help raise much-needed funds (from taxes and a cut of parking fees). Real estate values would skyrocket. Look at all that land for sale on Route 3A! We would need another supermarket, maybe a railyard pub, a whistlestop steak house and maybe even a Greenbush Plaza! I envision tasteful hotels tucked up above Little Harbor to take advantage of our natural beauty. Some abutters may protest, but this type of growth will improve our town. (We can't and shouldn't allow a few landowners to hold back growth! NIMBYism will not be tolerated!!) Such development will earn money for needy areas like schools, water pipes, sewerage, sidewalks and the fight against CHL. Think of the potential we are sitting on! The governor himself said the railroad was part of his plan to help develop our part of the state.

Forget the Coastal Coalition's warnings, let's look ahead. Let's not get hung up about "mitigation." Instead of arguing, like Hingham and Scituate about "impacts," we should reach out to the MBTA. After all, they know what they're doing. We should grab at this opportunity and embrace the future before it passes our town by.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Johnston official Congressional candidate

It is now official. Phil Johnston is a Democratic candidate for the 10th Congressional District.

After an intensive month-long effort to gather nomination signatures for Johnston's candidacy, field workers and volunteers gathered more than 6,000 signatures — more than three times the number necessary to place Johnston's name on the September 17th ballot. The total included certified signatures from every city and town in the 10th district.

May 31, Johnston arrived at Secretary of State William Galvin's office with the certified nomination papers. The state office is prepared to handle a total of 4,000 signatures. At final count, the Johnston campaign submitted 4,100 certified signatures.

"We put together an all-out effort to gather signatures for my candidacy from every city and town within the district. It was important to me that our field of workers and volunteers were visible and out in every neighborhood of the district gathering support for the campaign. It was a successful effort on all fronts and obviously, I'm quite pleased with the outcome," Johnston said.

Johnston, the former New England Director of the United States Department of Health and Human Services, is running for the seat being vacated by the retirement of U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds.

'Greenbush is a bad choice'

To the Editor:

The People of Massachusetts should be greatly alarmed by the proposal to restore the Greenbush train on the South Shore corridor. This $300 million debt will negatively impact the bond ratings of all Massachusetts communities and add to the tax burden of all Massachusetts residents. The total benefiting population is seven small towns and about 800 riders.

In contrast. the city of Portland, Oregon, is spending the same amount of local money for the same 18 miles of track for a ridership of 22,500 people, benefiting the city itself as well as surrounding communities. The Portland project makes sense in terms of the magnitude of social benefit for the dollars spent. The Greenbush Line expenditure does not.

The Portland, Oregon, rail system appears much more financially, socially and environmentally reasonable:

According to the Portland Oregon Chamber of Commerce, Office of Community Affairs,

- The project is costing local taxpayers $250 million (plus Federal funding)
- It anticipates a ridership of 27,500 (or $11,000 per rider)

They are abiding by Federal and state environmental guidelines,

- It has nowhere near 42 grade crossings.
- The terminus is in a current bus parking lot (not in environmentally sensitive wetlands).
- It will be self-supporting by the year 2005.

By contrast, the Greenbush Train project is not a financially sound investment.

It will cost $300 million of Massachusetts taxpayer money to lay 18 miles of track.

- It has an estimated ridership of 800 people. ($350,000 per rider).
- It will never produce enough revenue to be self-sustaining, and will require massive subsidies.

At last review the state will not be taking any Federal money in order to avoid Federal environmental regulations.

- Safety issues: It will have 42 grade crossings at street level during this 18 miles.
- The terminus in Scituate is in the floodplain of an environmentally protected river. The river does flood and will carry away diesel fuel, pesticides and other residue from the trains in the terminus into this environmentally sensitive river.

The project is being actively and very emotionally fought by more than half the population who live in the seven towns.

When seeing this comparison, the Massachusetts decision to approve the Greenbush train line appears to be a breach of public trust. The social benefit does not justify the expenditure. This money could benefit hundreds of towns and thousands of people in projects which have a wider scope with social benefit of greater magnitude.

Massachusetts bond ratings are already low enough without our legislature willfully incurring another $300 million in debt which will never be paid down by the revenues from the project itself. The projected financial losses from subsidizing such a low ridership will be a burden on all Massachusetts municipalities raising money through bond issues in the future.

In addition to the finances, the environmental issues are in direct opposition to all we have done over the years to preserve our natural habitats and coastline. When I mentioned to the Portland Oregon Chamber of Commerce representatives that we the planned terminus in protected wetlands, I met with incredulous disbelief and, in fact, laughter (they thought I was joking). One person expressed great relief that they did not live in Massachusetts.

This Greenbush Line is a terrible business decision and an appalling use of taxpayer money. I urge you to research this misuse of public funds for yourselves.

Sunoco station on Rte. 3A to get a face-lift

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

The Planning Board last week granted conditional approval to a site plan for the refurbishment of the Sunoco service station located across from the Super Stop & Shop on Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A).

While the existing building will remain basically unchanged, its outside appearance will be upgraded. Likewise, the gasoline pump island, underground storage tanks and landscaping will all be modernized.

Shrubs and bushes will be planted along the sides of the service station bordering roadways. The purpose of the plantings is to control headlight glare to surrounding properties from vehicles entering and exiting the station.

A 14-foot-high canopy will be constructed over the station's single island (a 13'6" minimum is required for tanker trucks), and area lighting will be contained within the canopy structure, thereby eliminating excessive glare to motorists passing on the adjacent highway.

Sun Oil Company, which owns the property and leases the location, is undertaking the changes as part of a normal updating of its facilities.

"We're taking a 50-year-old building and cleaning it up," said Peter Williams, a spokesman for the project. Sun Oil would like construction to begin immediately, he said, with final completion taking about 60 days.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore informed officials that final approval would be granted upon a favorable recommendation from the Design Review Board.

The board also approved the plans of Nichols Road resident Ronald Goldberg to construct an elevated walkway and dock behind his home on Little Harbor. The ramp would be three feet wide by approximately 40 feet long.

• In other business, board members passed on to the Zoning Board of Appeals their unanimous approval for the sale of the town-owned Victorian house, which is the former Cohasset Colonials' showroom on the Hagerty property site, to Cohasset Harbor Marina, Inc.

Marina owner Paul Trendowicz would like to move the building across the street from its present location and use it as a ship's chandlery and office.

Moore, who is also a member of the Hagerty Committee (the board established for the purpose of recommending a viable plan for the town-owned, two-acre site), abstained from voting. He did, however, thank fellow board members for their support of the sale.

• Additionally, the board passed on to the ZBA [illegible]r approval of a special permit for Jerusalem Road residents John and Doris Golden to operate a three-room bed and breakfast from their property.

Residents to push for appeal of water rate ruling

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

A week after the Department of Public Utilities approved a 155 percent rate increase for Massachusetts-American Water Company customers, residents in North Cohasset are mustering to push for an appeal of the decision.

"I want to do something to appeal this decision," said Jerusalem Road resident Maria Plante. Plante, who plans to bring the matter up with selectmen at their next meeting (the board is meeting on a bi-weekly basis) has been on the phone all week contacting the governor, the chairman of the DPU and local legislators, state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, and state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth. Plante is encouraging her neighbors to do the same.

"I called the governor's office to find out if the DPU is really there to protect consumers, and to let the chairman know that we're not receiving high quality water," said Plante, who continues to buy bottled water and complains of discolored water and poor water pressure.

"Every time I turn on the tap, I never know if it's going to be brown or not, but it usually is," she said.

Invited to join Hingham selectmen who met in executive session Tuesday with town counsel to discuss a possible appeal, Cohasset selectmen were unable to attend due to a conflicting meeting, said Town Administrator Greg Doyon. Doyon said there has been no formal discussion by the board about an appeal.

The deadline to appeal the DPU's decision is June 20, said Mass-American Director of Rates and Revenues Rod Nevirauskas.

Nevirauskas said the water company has no plans to appeal the decision which allowed all but nine percent of the requested rate hike.

Any appeal would go directly before supreme judicial court, said Nevirauskas, who noted however that the courts give the DPU a great deal of latitude. It is not likely that the decision can be overturned simply based on concerns about the higher rates, Nevirauskas said.

Sewer users may present case to special town meeting

North and central Cohasset may join forces

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

At a crowded meeting of the Sewer Commission Tuesday, North Cohasset homeowners heard there is still a chance they could receive help in offsetting the cost of sewer installation to the Straits Pond area.

Those residents are seeking relief from betterment charges amounting to about $870 per year. Coupled with the recent announcement by Massachusetts American Water Company of a 155 percent water rate increase, many of those in attendance were visibly agitated. (North Cohasset is on Hingham water).

The March 20 town meeting approved a loan for the sewer project, but a subsequent Prop. 2-1/2 special override election May 4, which would have reduced the users' extra costs by half, was narrowly defeated by 68 votes. Consequently, Cohasset's 345 affected residences must pick up the tab for the entire cost of connecting to the Hull sewage treatment plant over the next 20 years.

Commission Chairman Edward Guild said the topic of connection rates could be brought before the town at October's special town meeting. At that time voters will be asked to approve sewer expansion funding for the Hillside and central sections of Cohasset as well as the upgrading of the town's treatment facility.

"There is no reason we cannot submit both articles on one (ballot) question and have them pass," he said. "The bottom line is that the two districts (North & Central) are going to come out the same."

One resident said she felt many voters really didn't understand the ballot question, and the potential town-wide ramifications, when they rejected the override in May. Therefore, residents will have to do an even better job come October, she told Guild.

"People in all sections of town need to know that they will be treated equally when it comes to their turn," offered another.

And while Guild was sympathetic to the plight of North Cohasset homeowners, his observation that they will be charged the same rate as their Hull neighbors drew little satisfaction from anyone in the room.

Engineer Dan Coughlin estimated the North Cohasset costs to be $6.3 million and the Hillside/central Cohasset costs at $6.6 million.

He further stated that from the awarding of the contract for the construction of the pumping station, to be located at West Corner, connection time onto the Hull system would take 480 days. The installation of the Cohasset collection system would be completed within 660 days.

According to estimates, Coughlin stated that both projects are on schedule and final state legislative approval for the North Cohasset segment should be forthcoming by the end of this month.

In trying to explain the complicated formula of dollars and percentages of state subsidies, Coughlin and Guild finally reverted to stating the town is eligible for 75 percent grant-equivalency funding.

"It comes out the same as if they (the legislature) provided a 30 per cent straight grant," Guild said.

At the request of several in attendance, copies of the North Cohasset project will be available for viewing during normal business hours at the building inspector's office at town hall and at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Guild encourages anyone with concerns about the plans to talk with the sewer commission. A public forum on the plans will be July 11, Guild said.

Monday's meeting opened to a raucous start when a number of residents took exception to the early (6 p.m.) start of the commission hearings.

"This is the largest expenditure in the history of the town, so every meeting is very important to all of us. If you can't make it (starting hour) appropriate enough for the citizens of this town then you should get off the board," shouted Patrick Plante.

Guild responded by telling Plante the commission would take the suggestion of a later starting hour under advisement.

Get a jump on mosquito season

The Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee strongly urges citizens to initiate surveys of the area surrounding each house. Particular attention should be paid to objects such as old tires, bird baths, toy pails, gutters, etc., and surface areas where stagnant water may collect. It takes only a few days of such stagnation to permit hatching of adult mosquitoes from previously deposited eggs. Water in bird baths and wading pools should be changed at least once a week. If your area has a sizable expanse of stagnant water (e.g., a small pond) or even a depression in the ground which repeatedly retains small quantities of water for three days to a week, it is essential either to drain such areas or to apply a biological inhibitor, such as a preparation containing the bacterium Bacillus thuringiensis (Bti), which is harmless to humans and pets but which prevents development of adult mosquitoes. These inhibitors are available as powders, "dunks," or sprays in most garden supply or hardware stores.

Current information about mosquito control provided by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, the Audubon Society, and general medical media is available to Cohasset residents in a hang-pocket located in the entry area of Town Hall. For further information, you may call the Cohasset Board of Health at 383-9900, Ext. 121, leaving your name and telephone number so that a member of the Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee can call you personally.

It is important to be aware that the majority of safety standards for pesticide use set by the U.S. Government are primarily based on tolerance levels for adults. Young children and aged seniors are often harmed at such dosage levels. We respectfully request that citizens intending to spray their yards with a pesticide or requesting such spraying by the Plymouth District, please notify neighbors sufficiently in advance so that proper precautions can be taken to protect families from the impact of spray drift. Plymouth District staff usually spray in the very early morning at 4 to 8 a.m. If neighbors know that spraying is to occur, windows maybe closed and pets kept indoors.

"SO THE DOCTOR SAYS 'DIABETES.'

I SAY 'SO WHAT?'

I FEEL FINE."

COMMON MYTHS. There are many myths about diabetes. One is that "feeling fine" means you don't need to take action. The reality is if you're not paying attention to your diabetes—testing blood sugars at home, making needed adjustments to your treatment—you really don't know if you are "fine." By the time you don't feel well, you could be in trouble. A diagnosis of diabetes should be an immediate call to action. At the Joslin Diabetes Centers, we'll show you how the right mix of medication, nutrition, and exercise can help you feel fine now—and in the future. We'll provide a program that's just right for you and show you how to take an active role in managing diabetes. The team approach pioneered at Joslin treats the entire person, not just the condition. D&A committee hopes parents flock to forum

Results of risk behavior survey due

KEN RITCHIE
Special to the Mariner

During Tuesday evening's meeting of the Drug and Alcohol Committee, members discussed the results of the "Youth Risk Behavior Survey" that was administered to Cohasset students in grades 7-12 back in February.

The results were formally presented to interested parents for discussion on Wednesday night at Cohasset High School in the form of a Parent Forum. (Due to a press-time constraint, The Mariner will include coverage of this event in next week's issue).

"Events like this should be held much more frequently than just once every one or two years," Committee Chair Craig Muir stated. "Parents need to get involved and forums like this will definitely help."

Each parent was mailed a packet containing the survey results along with a letter from the high school. According to the letter, "the results clearly indicate that the youth of Cohasset is very similar to the youth of the nation as a whole ... when choosing behaviors that place them at risk."

The survey's questions varied from suicidal thoughts to drug and alcohol abuse, a problem the committee feels should addressed and discussed considerably.

The committee was also concerned with the parent turn-out of the forum, hoping parents will get involved after realizing the somewhat eye-opening results of the survey.

"We are interested to see what participation there will be," stated Muir. "Parents should be aware of the results of this survey."

The survey's questions varied from suicidal thoughts to drug and alcohol abuse, a problem the committee feels should addressed and discussed considerably.

• In old business, the committee praised the work of those involved in Hingham High School's "Senior Night" graduation celebration for students.

According to Muir, the doors of the high school opened at 11 p.m. that evening for graduates and were then locked shut at 11:30 and enforced by DARE officers before re-opening at 5:30 a.m. for the students to leave.

This was no prison, however.

"The kids partied their brains out," Muir stated.

A police officer equipped with a "breathalyzer" guarded the entrance, making sure no one with booze on their breath was allowed to enter.

The night was filled with a slew of festivities including a velcro-maze, padded sumo wrestling, and moon-walk volleyball.

The committee hopes to someday help Cohasset follow in the footsteps of many of the surrounding towns in planning such highly successful graduation celebrations.

"We need to somehow combine our efforts in this town for something like this to happen," Muir stated. "It isn't something that can be done by individuals alone, we need to meet with other groups and volunteers to ensure a full team effort."

• In other news, Muir formally announced the resignation of three-year committee member Ellie Waal.

"Ellie was one of the most active and hardworking members on the committee," Muir said. "She has put a lot of blood, sweat and tears into this committee."

• The next scheduled meeting of the Drug and Alcohol Committee is Tuesday, July 9 at the Town Hall. The meeting is open to the public.

Village cleanup a success

The Cohasset Village cleanup effort was a success. Residents, including children, and merchants volunteered to help clean up several areas throughout the Village on two separate days.

A general cleanup took place, with a special effort made in preparation for Harborfest weekend.

Katie Wenmark, Ary Afshar, and Yazmine Afshar help out during the recent village clean-up effort. The clean-up was part of an on-going effort to revitalize the village.

Local cyclist plays part in Olympics

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Samuel Morse has always had close ties to the Olympic Games. This Saturday they'll become even closer.

Morse will carry the Olympic torch on a specially built bicycle during two 28-kilometer (approximately 17 miles) stages of the 84-stage cross-country journey as it swings through Massachusetts. The bicycle, provided to Morse by sponsors, has a special mount on the front to carry the torch.

At 5:15 a.m., Morse will receive the torch in Tyngsboro and bike to Acton. His second leg begins at approximately 7 a.m., when he bikes from Stow to Hudson.

An avid cyclist and member of the United States Bicycling Federation (USBF) for the past 15 years, Morse, along with other members were asked to write a biography of themselves for consideration in cycling a leg of the relay.

"It was quite an honor to be selected as a cyclist," Morse said. "I was very excited."

When Morse sees the torch again, he'll be in Atlanta for the Opening Ceremonies. His brother, Marty Morse, is coaching the wheelchair athletes in the exhibition events and will also be coaching at the Para Olympics, later in the summer.

"We'll be heading down to Atlanta this year," he said. "We're a very sports-oriented family."

Morse is looking forward to the track cycling competition and watching the best cyclists in the world vie for a medal. He expects the event to be a strong one for the United States.

"It's one of the events where the U.S. should get some gold medals," Morse said.

Morse's wife, Trish, was an organizer for the torch relay at the Los Angeles Olympics in 1984 and is currently serving on the Boston Organizing Committee. The committee is gearing its efforts to bringing the games to Boston in 2012.

With the number of sports facilities, college dormitories to house athletes and the close proximity to the city, Morse believes there's a strong possibility the world will be coming to Boston in 16 years.

"There's a great chance the games will be in Boston," Morse said. "2012 certainly gives them (the committee) a lot of time. If Atlanta can do it, we can do it."

Tourney could be habit

Batmen look to bright postseason future

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

It was a milestone season for the Cohasset Skippers varsity baseball team. Earning their first tourney berth in 24 years, the Skippers called on a wide range of players to help them achieve their goal. Four seniors filled leadership roles desperately needed to make the tournament. Two juniors were named to the South Shore League All-Star team. A pair of sophomores played key roles and three freshmen played starting roles. An eighth grader stepped into a starting role and finished with an ERA which hovered around 2.00.

Coached by Ron Ford, the Skippers battled to an 11-11 record and made the tournament in the last game of the the season. Hampered by missing players, sore arms and the foul spring weather, Cohasset showed heart in its season, and always kept fans guessing as to whether or not it would make the tournament. For the first time in recent memory, Cohasset gave the mighty Norton Lancers a tough game. The Lancers, a perennial powerhouse, were shocked by the Skippers, who held them to a tight game, but finally fell in a contest which could have gone either way.

A dramatic must-win game in Hull was spiced up by poor umpiring and a keyed-up Pirates team. However, the Skippers pulled that one out as they would in several nail-biters this spring. In a strong league which sent a state-high six teams to the tournament, the Skippers managed to hustle their way into a tourney spot.

Captain Greg Stevens, a senior pitcher, also had a sparkling ERA. Ford said that Stevens "has a lot of heart, he pitched great games against great teams...he's

Good youth coaches worth weight in gold

Every Little Leaguer should have the opportunity to play for the type of coach featured on the television magazine show "20/20" last Thursday night. The segment revealed an interesting and refreshing insight into the behind-closed-door deals of the draft and the wheeling and dealing of players. It then followed a team in New Jersey, specifically its first-year coach as he struggled through the intracies of coaching a squad of enthusiastic youngsters. The segment ended with the team pulling off a huge upset over the first-place squad in the league.

Reardon

The coach appeared completely bewildered by the deals and trades being made on draft day and obviously lacked the savvy of the other coaches when it came to putting together a quality roster.

But this guy was the real deal. He was a bright guy who knew he was dealing

Take us out to the ballpark girls

The 1996 Cohasset Girls Softball season is underway. This week's featured teams are the Blue Blazers, sponsored by South Shore Chevrolet and coach by Steve Cook, Jim Watts, Barbara Esposito and Lottie Cook. The Coolers are sponsored by Dalton Spring Water and coached by Martha O'Grodnik, Bob Turgiss and Laura Chase.

Blue Blazers blaze along

By LOTTIE COOK
Special to the Mariner

What a super group of athletes the Blue Blazers have. Starting with catchers Calla Staszko, Mackenzie Holway, Danielle Hajjar, Kerri-Anne Esposito and Kristen Watts, the Blazers should be set behind the plate for the season. Ashley Cook, Jessie Guild and Lindsey Feig will rotate at first and pitching. Carlinturino, Molly Liddell, Nicole Durant, Alicia Sanchez, Emile Sulivan and Alanna Hughes will rotate at second, third and shortstop.

All of the players are doing an outstanding job in the outfield, especially with the very important job of backing up the infielders. Keep up the good work Blue Blazers!

The Coolers are hot

By LAURA CHASE
Special to the Mariner

Sponsored by Dalton Spring Water, the Coolers have had a terrific softball season! Many of the girls who have never palyed softball before have played all the positions. They've lined doubles, made some great catches and learned the rules of the game. Some of the more experienced girls have improved their fielding and hitting and have been encouraged to be mentally prepared to make the best plays once the ball is in play. Regardless of their experience, all of the girls have rallied aroudn each other and have shown encouragement and support to each other.

Congratulations Coolers for your good sportsmanship throughout the season!

Derby Academy honors Cohasset athletes

Cohasset's Kara Gaughen and Corinna Noering were recently awarded for their athletic contributions at the Girls' Athletic Banquet at Derby Academy in Hingham.

The event, which was held in front of more than 125 parents, faculty members and students in the John H. Ross Dining Room, celebrated the athletic acheivements of the girls in Grades 6 through 9.

Gaughen's contributions to the Grade 6 basketball team were recognized and Noering's efforts as a member of the JV basketball team earned her the praise of those in attendance.

The athletic award ceremony was conducted by Janet Evans-Fuller, the head of girls' athletics, and coaches Nancy Anderson and Gayle Myers.

Boat clubs to host junior championships

This will be an exciting August on the water when the Mass Bay Sailing 1996 BayBank Junior Championships are co-hosted by the Cohasset Yacht Club and the Cohasset Sailing Club. This big event is expected to draw more than 300 junior sailors, ages seven through high school, from the Boston, North Shore and South Shore areas.

The participants will launch from Cohasset Harbor and proceed to designated areas. There will be class events for Optimists, Turnabouts, Lasers and Club 420's during the three days of stiff competitive racing on the bay. The hosts will conduct green fleet races as well.

In addition to the wonderful sailing during this regatta, the hosts have planned many social events to make the guests and their parents, instructors, and the whole planning force feel welcome. There will be a pizza party, cookout, a dance party for the sailors, a cocktail party Tuesday evening for the adults at Bancroft Hall above the harbor; and morning snacks and lunches will be provided on race days. Many families of local Cohasset sailors will help out by opening their homes to wayward sailors from north of Boston who need a place to stay during the regatta.

Mark your calendars and set aside August 13 through 15 for the BayBank Junior Championships outside of Cohasset Harbor, where the sailing promises to be fast and exciting on open bay waters, and the social gatherings hosted by the Cohasset Yacht Club and the Cohasset Sailing Club will be just as memorable and fun.

Sisters Tara (Left) and Erica Hettstrom placed fifth and sixth, respectively, on their bar routines in the 15-and-over Intermediate division of the 1996 NEAAU Regional Gymnastics Championships. Erica also took third place on the floor exercise and fifth in the all around.

Coaches worth weight in gold

w[illegible]vulnerable kids, not professionals pulling down seven-figure paychecks. He made no bones about the fact he had no idea what slot his team would fill in the league standings once the season got rolling along. However, that wasn't his goal. His bottom-line agenda was to teach the kids the fundamentals of the game and make it fun in the process.

This coach's approach was in sharp contrast to the coach of the first-place squad, who ruled his team the way Bobby Knight runs Indiana's basketball program. Not a heck of a lot of laughs, but the results were there. The only difference was that Knight coaches college-aged kids. They can take a tongue lashing every now and then. Try that to an elementary or junior high player and the damage can run deep.

This guy was simply taking coaching Little League far too seriously. Just by watching him, it was interesting to wonder how good he was as a youngster. The coach was a bully, no way around around it.

When his team was trailing the first-year coach's squad heading into its last at-bat, he read the players the riot act as if a loss would permanently be plastered on their resumes.

It was the two coaches, both so different in their philosophies, who had some of the most riveting comments. The coach of the top team said he didn't want the kids playing unless they were going to give the game everything they had. He told the "20/20" correspondent that he was preparing them for life. Sure it was only a game, he reasoned, but the earlier they learned hard work brings the best results, the better.

The first-year coach commented that it was his players who left each game with smiles on their faces, win or lose. He didn't, however, see too many smiles from the first-place players. What he did see were serious looks, kids who were too concerned about making mistakes and bearing the brunt of their coach's anger than actually concentrating on having a good time playing a game they supposedly loved.

With Little League now in full gear and many of the playoffs approaching, you have to wonder how many kids are truly having fun playing baseball. It's up to the coaches to build the players up and help their passion for the game grow that much more.

A Little League coach has the unique opportunity to make a positive influence on young kids. A great coach can give the youngsters happy memories that last a lifetime. A lousy coach can permanently turn a kid off from baseball and organized sports in general. And you can bet that when the youngster grows up and has kids of his own, he'll be wary about his own children playing an organized sport, if he considers the idea at all.

You often hear about parents interfering with the coach's handling of a team. It's one thing when a parent complains that his son should be batting third and playing somewhere in the infield. It's another completely when the parent gives the coach a piece of his mind when his child leaves the field with tears in his eyes after a scolding for dropping a fly ball to left field.

Let's hope the coaches, many of whom are frustrated jocks who were failures at sports as children, don't make the selfish mistake of living out their unfulfilled childhood dreams through their players. For those players stuck with a drill sergeant for a coach, hopefully they won't lose their love for a game that has caught the imagination of the United States for more than 100 years.

From what I've seen, the Little League and majority of youth coaches throughout the South Shore are knowledgeable and relate great with the kids. Cohasset's coaches have shown they're there for the kids and not their own special interests. As a result, the young athletes have a summer filled with competitive, instructional, but most importantly, fun baseball.

really had a great career for us."

Providing leadership on and off the field, Sevens, who also picked up three saves this year, will attend Assumption College in the fall.

Another senior co-captain was Eric Henry, Cohasset's starting left fielder. Henry showed off his great glove by making a diving, desperation grab of a sinking liner during a tournament game. Henry, an excellent hitter in addition to his fielding prowess, will be packing his bags for Bowdoin College next year.

Mike Dunphy, Cohasset's durable utility man, played nearly every position this year. A superb fastball hitter and a speedster on the basepaths, Dunphy played every position but catcher and first base this year. Dunphy will go to UMass-Dartmouth next fall.

Rafael Alarcon, the Skippers' imported ringer, was an exchange student from Chile. Also an excellent volleyball player, Rafael showed a marked improvement in his skills toward the second half of the year and provided the team with spirit off the bench.

Headed by these four seniors, the Skippers put together a great season, However, next year holds the possibility of being even better. Rob Buckley, Grant Emde, Joe Magner and Kevin McKenna should all return for one more year. Pat Hurley and Mark Kupsc, who both saw action as sophomores this year, will step into larger roles next spring, as sophomores, promise to improve. Eighth-grader Joe Pergola should further develop as strong fastball pitcher. With this nucleus and prospects coming up from JV, it appears as if the Skippers will once again be tourney-bound.

Cohasset swim center opens June 15

The opening day for the Cohasset Swim Center is June 15. Swimming lesson signups will be held Saturday, June 22, from 9 to 11 a.m.

Swim team tryouts are set for Tuesday, June 18, from 3:30 to 5 p.m. and Wednesday, June 19, from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. Tryouts are for new swimmers only.

Mixed doubles tennis slated for June 22

South Shore Community Center in Cohasset will sponsor a mixed doubles tennis tournament and mixed senior tournament Saturday, June 22, with finals to be played Sunday, June 23, rain or shine.

Entry fee is $50 per player; $35 for players 60 and older. Registration closes June 19. Participants will be contacted June 20 after 5 p.m. with their starting time and court location.

Biggest youth lacrosse tourney in U.S. June 16

More than 1,300 youth lacrosse players from Massachusetts and Rhode Island will gather in Marshfield on Sunday, June 16, for the fourth annual Massachusetts Bay Youth Lacrosse League Jamboree.

The Jamboree will feature competition among 60 teams of fifth-, sixth-, seventh- and eighth-graders representing the 18 cities and towns competing in the MBYLL. All games will take place at the Marshfield High School athletic fields.

Highlighting the day's events will be the second annual New England High School Senior All-Star Game, at 1 p.m. and the United States Northeast Club Championship at 3 p.m. Both contests will be held in the Marshfield High School football stadium.

The daylong event, which begins at 8 a.m., is sponsored by Brine, Inc., Gatorade, Lax USA, the Marshfield Lacrosse Boosters, the Town of Marshfield and New England Lacrosse, Inc. Admission is $5 per carload, with proceeds to support Massachusetts Bay Youth Lacrosse.

"We're very excited to bring this event to the South Shore," said MBYLL president Jay Williams of Norwell. "Lacrosse has had explosive growth in this region, both in players and teams. As a result, this will be the biggest Jamboree ever."

Williams predicted a turnout of between 5,000 and 10,000 for the event. Besides the games, attendees will be able to experience a "Festival of Lacrosse" — dunk tank, fast-shot contest, a vendors' row and other activities.

The high school all-star game will pit Eastern Massachusetts' top public school seniors against their New England prep school counterparts. Among the public school players are Rich Santoro of Hingham, Newton North's Todd McNamara, Weymouth's Mike Scott and Winchester's Alex Racioppi. The preps are led by Middlesex's Ian Nurse, Thayer's Jarod Lieberman and Belmont Hill's Campbell MacColl The head coaches are Boston College High's Tom Frisoli and Tabor Academy's Ian Patrick.

The club championship features the Brine Outlaws, led by Major Indoor Lacrosse League stars Tom Carmean, Randy Fraser, Scott Hiller and Billy Daye. They'll play the Long Island, New York champion.

Future Cohasset High gymnastics star Jackie Flint finished in third place during the vaulting competition in the 8-and-under Novice division of the 1996 NEAAU Gymnastics Championships.

Meeting for parents of incoming kindergartners

Osgood School is holding an information meeting for parents of incoming kindergartners for the 1996-'97 school year, Monday, June 17, at 7 p.m. in the Osgood School Library to discuss questions and answers regarding the kindergarten's new location at Deer Hill School.

Summer sessions at Academic Express

This summer, Academic Express, a specially-designed tutoring program for children in grades K-6, will focus on three important areas of education based on current research: reading with understanding, writing in response to reading and math concepts and facts.

Current research related to the importance of "reading with understanding" continues to affirm that reading only occurs when there is comprehension. If readers have inadequate background knowledge, comprehension is limited. Before reading, students need to get ready to read by thinking about what they know about the topic. Building and activating background knowledge can have powerful effects on abilities to comprehend, remember and solve problems.

The Academic Express will help students master this and other strategies in its summer sessions.

The Academic Express is headed by Joy Turpie, Ed.D and Mary Aucoin, M.Ed. and staffed by certified master teachers. Four sessions will be offered.

For further information about session dates or to register, call 749-1703.

Rec program offers expanded hours

Cohasset Enrichment Program, through the Cohasset public schools, will offer a Before- and After-Recreation Program this summer, beginning the week of July 1 and continuing through Aug. 16. The program will not run July 4 and 5.

Held at Deer Hill School, it is open to children who will be in grades K-6 in the fall. The Before-Recreation Program opens at 7 a.m. and runs until the program begins at 9 a.m. Children may bring their own breakfast, and quiet activities will be offered. Children attending Recreation at Osgood School will be escorted there by a teacher.

The After-Recreation Program begins at 3 p.m. and runs until 6 p.m. The format is similar to the after-school enrichment program, with organized sports, cooking projects, games, arts and crafts and, for the summer, swimming at the town pool. Children at Osgood will be escorted to Deer Hill by a teacher.

Registrations are accepted for limited times or for the entire program. Sign-ups begin the week of June 16, but children must be registered for the program prior to signing up for the Recreation Program. The registration deadline is Friday, June 7. For further information, call Missy Walker at 383-6860 or stop in at Room 2 at DHS to pick up a registration form.

For more details about the program, call Director Thalia McMillion at 740-4766.

Roger D. Williams (far left), chairman of the Scholarship Committee at the Pilgrim Skating Arena, Inc., and Hoby Taylor (far right), arena president, present a $1500 scholarship to Ryan W. Sawchuk, 1996 graduate of Cohasset High School. Sawchuk plans to attend Princeton. The Pilgrim Skating Arena awards scholarships annually to selected high school seniors in the South Shore communities. Any graduating senior, intending to further his or her education beyond high school at any accredited institution is eligible to apply. This year the arena awarded a total of 18 scholarships to local graduates.

Bay Band to perform at Festival

The South Shore Bay Band will play on center stage at South Shore Art Center's Annual Festival on the Common Saturday, June 15, from 6 to 8 p.m. Hingham Institute for Savings is sponsoring the band concert.

The performance will include music written by a variety of composers, including John Philip Souza, John Williams, Marvin Hamlisch and George Gershwin.

The band was formed in 1993 as a vehicle for musicians who enjoy concert band music to gather for the purpose of playing a series of outdoor concerts.

Gospel concert at First Parish

The First Parish of Cohasset, Main Street, will present the New Temple Singers, under the direction of David Coleman, in a gospel concert, Saturday, June 15, at 8 p.m., as part of Cohasset's Arts Festival and Harborfest celebrations. The concert will be held in the First Parish Meeting House on Cohasset Common.

The New Temple Singers is a dynamic mixed chorus of singers who perform contemporary and original gospel music. The choir has performed at the Joyful Noise Concert in Sanders Theater, Special programs at Buckingham, Brown and Nichols schools, at the inauguration of Bishop Barbara Harris in Hynes Auditorium and numerous other community service programs. The choir, which sings at Sunday worship services at the St. Paul AME Church in Cambridge, has made two recordings.

Coleman has composed and arranged several of the musical selections. He is a music teacher at Beaver Country Day School in Newton and the administrator of a summer recruitment program at Boston Conservatory of Music. He is also the director of the 70-voice gospel choir at Boston University, the Inner Strength Gospel Choir.

Tickets are $7 ($5 with a Harborfest button) and are available at the First Parish Unitarian Universalist Church office, open Monday through Thursday, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Call 383-1100 for tickets or information.

A group of 11 Cohasset Junior/Senior High School students will perform during the Festival on the Common this weekend. "Allegra" was formed last November by its director, Ann Whiteley, for the purpose of encouraging small ensemble singing for teenage girls, while at the same time providing community service opportunities in Cohasset.

During the past few months, the group has performed for the Rotary Club, taken part in worship services at St. Stephen's Church and provided a program for a surprise birthday party.

The 45-minute program offers the audience a wide variety of musical styles with familiar titles. Allegra will perform a composition written by Mrs. Whiteley, and will make an appearance on Saturday, June 15, at 4 p.m. in the sanctuary of Second Congregational Church.

Concerts for folk and blue grass fans

The Festival on the Common, set for this weekend, has scheduled performances by folk trio P, B and J, who will appear on Center Stage, Saturday, June 15, at 11 a.m., and the blue grass group Northern Lights, who will perform on Center Stage Sunday, June 16, at 4:30 p.m.

The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863

The day I stopped by 174 Hull St. on the Hingham/Cohasset line to admire Jean Devine's curving border planting of yellow iris, she was hard at work in the gardens. The large beds curve along each side of the driveway leading to the side entrance of the home. Jean cleverly painted her yellow door with wild flowers where a wreath welcomes guests to enter as they pass the well-used boots of the busy gardener. Jean exuberantly showed me with great pride the Hostas at home in the bed with the yellow iris and the random touch of a bright orange oriental poppy. A towering dark pink rhododendron is on the property and Snow-in-Summer gracefully tumbles near the front stone steps. Jean tells me that at sunset the garden takes on a translucent look — be sure to stop by and enjoy this beautiful border garden.

Festival is fabulous

Annual event draws all ages

By KEN RITCHIE
Special to the Mariner

The temperature peaked at about 80 degrees, clouds were scarce, and the air was free of humidity. What could have prompted such a perfect day?

Well, various Dads across the nation will attest that Father's Day generally receives such astounding forecasts annually. They say it is nothing uncommon — just another justification of their splendor. However, in the town of Cohasset, popular consensus ruled that it was indeed the 1996 Festival on the Common that brought along the first-rate weather, along with its healthy sampling of arts, crafts and entertainment for all.

Along with featuring the 41st Annual South Shore Art Center Festival, this year's Festival on the Common also marked the 100th anniversary of St. Stephen's Church with a special Centennial Celebration. Sunday, day three of the festival, boasted the sixth annual Strawberry Festival, the fifth annual Harborfest, and the Harborfest Marching Parade.

Parking posed no problem, since a trolley ran to the common every few minutes from the parking lot at the Music Circus. Trolley passengers were taken on a serene jaunt down Sohier and North Main streets before being dropped off right in front of the festival. A smart alternative to battling for a parking space close to the common.

Brian Raftery makes his dad a Father's Day card in the Kids Tent at the Festival on the Common.

The Hingham Militia tips their hats to the crowd gathered along South Main Street for the Harborfest Parade.

At noon, the festival was underway, and a colorful cornucopia of booths were jamming with browsers and buyers. The phrase "arts and crafts" could not and would not apply here — for this festival's fabricators offered toys and trinkets far superior in originality to the average crafts fair.

From hand-crafted cut-coin jewelry to homemade gourmet mustards and herbal dips, each booth had something unique to share with festival goers.

While N. Guiraudet's hand-fashioned ceramic switchplates could doctor up any boring light switch inside your home, Lonnie Harp's exquisitely painted birdhouses (appropriately named "Tweet Suites") could serve to upscale the exterior of your home, possibly even increase its market value!

There was something for every fancy and for every taste.

The food department did not end with fried dough and french fries. The Second Congregational Church barbecued up your favorite style burger or hot dog. Dave and Jerry's Sausage Shop and Silver Spoon Cafe's specialty foods also graced the festival grounds, along with vendors offering oriental and Middle Eastern dishes.

For those with room for a dessert, a short venture across the common yielded the fruits of the Strawberry Festival. Set up like a French sidewalk cafe, patrons could sit outside with friends and family and enjoy a huge helping of strawberry shortcake. This, along with many other picturesque scenes of Americana, could have easily supplied Norman Rockwell with a career's worth of illustrations in

Water main project proceeds

Rate structure being looked at

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Phase II of Cohasset's water main replacement project is proceeding on schedule, with new pipes now being laid on Sohier Street.

Operations manager Richard Cohan said this is the second year of the $2 million project that will lay larger diameter pipes with the objective of improving water service throughout Cohasset.

Existing pipes serving homes on Sohier Street vary in size from 4 to 8 inches, he said. These will be replaced with 10-inch pipe for 4,500 feet. This segment of the project should be completed by mid-August.

In the meantime, temporary pipes have been laid above ground to avoid water service interruptions to residents.

The contractor is aware of potential traffic congestion the project could cause around the South Shore Music Circus and plans to have that portion of the job completed by the time the outdoor theater opens.

Following the Sohier Street pipe replacement, the work crew will move on to Beach Street where 6-inch pipes will be replaced with 10-inch diameter pipes for 3,800 feet. This work is estimated to begin in mid-August, and be completed in a month.

On Cedar Street, to the new public works department garage, 1,000 feet of 8-inch pipe will be laid; and Pond Street will see the 8-inch pipe replaced with 12-inch pipe from Cohasset High School to Route 3A.

Town counsel bill has to wait

Legal budget running on empty, selectmen say

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Ironically, town counsel's recent warning to selectmen over soaring legal costs may come back to haunt him.

This week, selectmen authorized payment of part of the bills attorney Paul DeRensis submitted, for services related to Dept. of Public Utilities hearings on the water rate increase slated for North Cohasset.

DeRensis projected the legal cost of joining Hingham and Hull in protesting the huge increase in water rates affecting those towns and North Cohasset at $8,000, but his bills came in at about $13,000. (North Cohasset is on Hingham water.)

Monday, selectmen opted to pay $3,800 toward the bill for the DPU hearings plus DeRensis' $2,500 retainer for June. The town previously paid $4,200 to DeRensis for the DPU hearings and that, added to the $3,800 authorized Monday, equals the $8,000 planned for, selectmen said.

There is about $3,600 left in the legal account for fiscal year 1996 which ends June 30 — not enough money to pay the additional $5,000 for the DPU hearings billed and other town counsel bills incurred for May and June in addition to the retainer.

So the remainder of the bills will have to wait possibly until special town meeting or a transfer from the advisory board, said selectmen who will revisit the issue later this month.

Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for seniors over age 60. RTF stickers are $65; $25 for a second vehicle if application is made at a different time; and $33 for a sole resident.

Vehicle registrations are required, or proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease) for those with vehicles that are not registered in Massachusetts.

Residents are encouraged to purchase both stickers through the mail by providing a copy of their registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

RTF stickers may be purchased at the RTF on weekends from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., by check only.

Resale shop gets nod

Selectmen approved issuing a livery license to Tiny Town Transportation and Delivery and a junk dealer's license to Child's Play Resale Shoppe this week. Both enterprises will be operated by Jennifer G. Pipenbrink and Margaret Litchfield.

Litchfield said the resale shop will be located at 215 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy. (Rte. 3A) and will sell used and new toys and used children's sports equipment. The livery service will offer a by-appointment-only transportation service catering to the needs of children and parents. The vehicles will be garaged at 175 Beechwood St. and 622 CJC Hwy.

Ellen Sanchez of the Children's Exchange told selectmen she was concerned the women would sell used children's clothing which her South Main Street shop offers.

Litchfield said they do not want to compete with the Children's Exchange and did not plan to offer used children's clothes.

DPW sponsors brush chipping June 29 & 30

The DPW will sponsor its second household brush chipping weekend at the Recycling Transfer Facility on Saturday and Sunday, June 29 and 30, from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

According to DPW Superintendent Harold W. Litchfield, no commercial brush or hedge trimmings will be accepted. There is no length limit, and brush may be up to 12 inches in diameter.

Thumbs up given to farmers market

Plans to hold a farmers market on Thursday evenings in the village from 4 to 8 p.m. for eight weeks starting Aug. 1 received an enthusiastic response from selectmen this week.

The effort is being spearheaded by the Chamber of Commerce and a group of citizens who are interested in revitalizing the village.

Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said he met with Police Chief Brian Noonan and they think the best spot for the market is in the town parking lot, running from the sand pile area by the old police garage along the back of the lot by the railroad tracks.

Anna Abbruzzese, who is on the village revitalization committee, came up with the concept of bringing the market to town.

She said the state Dept. of Agriculture is advertising the market in its newsletter for farmers.

Rizzo said plans are to ask the village merchants to stay open later on farmers' market Thursdays and that the market might help generate more foot traffic in the village on those evenings.

Selectmen wished Rizzo and Abbruzzese good luck with the project.

Replica needs power

Herb Jason asked selectmen this week to look into having the town provide electrical power to the Minot's Light Replica on Government Island.

Selectmen asked Town Administrator Gregory Doyon to check with Steve Wigmore of the wiring department about the cost of installing the service.

Displaying a stunning photograph of the replica at night, Jason said he had been getting power for the replica's light from the sailing club, a private organization.

Paint recycling at RTF

The RTF will host a paint recycling morning from 9 a.m. to noon, Saturday June 29, Selectmen Chairman Merle S. Brown reported this week.

Water main project proceeds

By mid-fall, water mains will be cleaned and lined with a one-eighth inch of concrete that will prevent the water from coming into contact with the iron pipes, Cohan explained.

This lining will improve water quality and prolong the life of the pipes by reducing corrosion.

Last year, new water pipes were installed on Atlantic Avenue, Forest Avenue, and Beechwood Street.

Cohan said the water department has had a few complaints about discolored water from residents who live near the work sites. In some cases, laundry has been discolored by rust in the water. In those cases, water department workers have delivered rust removers which can be added to laundry to eliminate the problem.

Low water pressure, a past source of complaints, has not been a problem, he said.

Cohan does not, at this time, anticipate water restrictions. Precipitation so far this year remains above normal, due to last winter's record snowfall, and the water level of Lilly Pond, the source of Cohasset's water supply, remains high. But he said, "I'd like to see some rain."

This would reduce the use of irrigation and sprinkler systems that produce the greatest demand for water. A day or two of rain would reduce residents' use of sprinkler systems, and would "allow the [water] plant to slow down," he said.

The proliferation of these lawn and garden irrigation systems has produced the incentive for the water commissioners to re-evaluate the town's water rate structure, according to commission chairman Fred Koed.

Last January, the commissioners hired a rate structure specialist who is now reviewing the way Cohasset residents pay for water. With information from him, Koed said, the commissioners hope to have an article for the fall special town meeting to revamp the rate system.

At the present, all Cohasset residents effectively subsidize the water rates of residents who use large amounts of water—particularly those with lawn and garden sprinkler systems, he said.

"We just want everyone to pay their fair share," Koed said.

A new rate structure would more equitably distribute the costs. Higher rates for high water consumption will recoup the water department's costs for larger pipes to satisfy demand, he said.

Other towns have two- and three-step water rate structures, which are now being considered in Cohasset.

The actual number of sprinkler systems is not known. As of two years ago, approximately 100 residences had lawn sprinkler systems, he said. More accurate numbers are not available because systems have been installed without the permits that should be obtained from the building department.

More important than obtaining the permits is that these systems increase demand for water, and the rate structure at this time does not address this, Koed said.

Painting bid awarded

Taunton-based GSP, Inc., the low bidder, will paint the town hall auditorium this summer.

Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said GSP bid $7,400. Bids ranged from $7,400 to $27,441.

Doyon said work includes painting inside of the auditorium (not the foyer) and some small carpentry work such as repairs to windows.

Town counsel bill has to wait

DeRensis is paid a monthly $2,500 retainer which does not include services for litigation or real estate issues. Selectmen plan to examine the latter exclusion because they feel matters such as drainage, while involving real estate, are routine and should be included in the retainer.

Last month, DeRensis told selectmen that the town's legal costs were out of control and faulted them for not laying down guidelines and providing control on a very close basis.

While Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said DeRensis has explained why the cost of the DPU hearings was more than expected, Brown found it difficult to project costs.

"It's hard," he said. "Counsels give a price but it's never the same price in the end."

In a related matter, selectmen decided, with Brown and Selectman Peter Pratt dissenting, that the town should stick with special environmental counsel Warner & Stackpole for the latest legal round with Cohasset Heights Landfill, a privately owned landfill off Route 3A.

They authorized $14,000 for W&S to serve as lead counsel in the town's responsive pleadings relating to CHL's appeal of the board of health's recent decision denying its site assignment application to expand.

Selectman Nan Roth explained that the decision, reached in executive session last week, to keep W&S on board was made because DeRensis, who was hired earlier this year, would need more time to catch up.

"It would be burdensome and difficult if not impossible to bring him up to speed (in this short amount of time)," she said.

Brown said he voted against keeping W&S because he wanted to hear from environmental specialist Daniel Deutsch of DeRensis' firm, Deutsch Williams Brooks DeRensis Holland & Drachman.

Pratt, who could not attend the meeting held in executive session last week, was outraged at the decision and said the vote, reached while in executive session, was illegal.

His motion that DeRensis' firm be retained as special environmental counsel failed for lack of a second.

Then to validate the board's prior vote held in executive session, Roth moved that W&S continue to represent the town on this issue, up to a maximum cost of $14,000, and at the same time consult with DeRensis who will eventually take over CHL litigation matters.

There is a chance the town's insurance company will cover the town's response to civil rights litigation filed by CHL, selectmen said.

Student survey concerns parents, educators

By STACEY POWERS
Special to the Mariner

Where were you last Wednesday when health education coordinator Michael Gill guided parents through results of a survey on youth risk behaviors at the high school?

More importantly, do you know where your children were?

Concerned parents gathered to discuss the results of student surveys conducted in February for grades seven through 12.

The Youth Risk Behavior Survey was developed by the National Centers for Disease Control, and is composed of a series of questions related to issues that concern kids today, such as drug and alcohol use, violence, suicide and sexual behavior. Students were asked to answer the questions as honestly as possible.

Gill is fairly certain of its accuracy, due mostly to the fact that the surveys passed in were anonymous, and that it was a "surprise test" during an extended homeroom period, allowing no time to prepare or predetermine answers. The results were electronically calculated and compared to a state average.

What's so alarming to some people about the survey is not the results themselves per se, but the idea that these decisions — to break the law, disrespect other people, disrespect one's own body — are being consciously made by some of the students in Cohasset.

"It takes a village to raise a child," quoted Gill from an African proverb. "We need to reach out and work together as families, as educators and as a community to bring about significant change with respect to the messages young people receive and the behaviors they choose to adopt."

Along with Donna O'Donnell, member of the school council, and Craig Muir, representative from the town Drug & Alcohol Committee, Gill received the results of the survey and printed a sample of the questions which stood out as "important issues" that need to be addressed.

"How do we nip this in the bud?" asked Muir of the audience. "The number one thing we must not do is deny what's going on here. These things are happening in Cohasset, maybe in our own families."

In overall comparison, Cohasset is a "little below everyone in the state with the exception of marijuana and alcohol use," conceded Gill. "Nothing here surprises me, and I have been here for the last five years."

Also present at the forum was Ron Ford, physical education teacher for grades 7-12, who also coaches boys basketball, baseball and girls junior high soccer. He has seen some evidence lately that attests to the results of the survey.

"(There's) no doubt that there are things on the rise, marijuana in particular, among the 7th- and 8th-graders as much as the older kids," he stated.

Ford says he has confronted kids directly about their usage, but they deny it. He is, however, legally mandated by law to report if a child admits to using alcohol or drugs to him, and he plays fair with the kids by letting them know this fact before they answer any of his questions.

"It's definitely harder to motivate kids to not do this stuff, especially during the season," Ford said. He also mentioned the boldness of some of the kids who make no effort to hide their behavior from their teachers. "It's a different place than it was five years ago when I started here," Ford said.

One parent commended Ford's efforts, saying she was "glad that there are teachers like you who are concerned about the kids."

Gill says he "hears things" around school, and calls parents all the time with suspicions. "Most parents are receptive to the information and thank me," he said.

One parent pointed out that nowadays "there seems to be a lack of responsibility for one's behavior and that "kids are not being held responsible for their actions."

Another parent urged that "we must keep our eyes open as parents; these things are happening in Cohasset, and people don't want to admit it."

Gill supported this theory, saying the evidence does not point solely in the direction of the schools. "Schools have an enormous responsibility to educate these kids, but we need to strengthen the community as a whole" to offset and combat these problems.

One gentleman said "the community has yet to speak with one voice," and that in doing so, "this would be the first step in the right direction."

Other issues parents were concerned about included violence, dating violence and suicide. Gill informed the crowd that there is an existing violence prevention program that is geared towards 8th-graders which discusses contributors to violence, how to recognize they are vulnerable to violence and how to use alternatives to violence.

Ford pointed out that the random acts of violence Cohasset schools see are "isolated incidents," and he added that there is a program for dating violence as well, which "has been an issue."

As for concerns over the number of kids contemplating suicide, Gill said the level was typical and normal for this age group.

One member of the audience suggested the schools offer full disclosure to the parents regarding what is going on at all times, prompting Gill to comment that with the right resources, he would like to think about putting together a newsletter to communicate with parents. Ford noted that "there are lots of good things going on, too, that parents need to know about, such as how there are kids leaving to go to private school and then making the decision to come back to Cohasset High School."

The bottom line, Gill insists, is that "we can make a change, but it has to start at home with the messages we send out to our children."

He said that "we need to focus on home and helping the kids become more media literate by learning to recognize the myths in advertising and how to filter through the messages that society sends them."

Gill told the crowd that his goal with the survey and the forum was to work towards modifying the curriculum to address these issues. "If we are to gain any ground in our efforts to keep our youth safe and well, 'the village' needs to recognize and acknowledge these issues and work together to solve them."

Some of the results from the high school survey listed:

Bancroft Rd. sign approved

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said he concurs with Bancroft Road resident George Burke that signs "Children Playing" and "Blind Driveway" are needed on the road for safety reasons. He said there is no money in the budget for flashing lights.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he'd like to see temporary speed bumps installed on Bancroft Road for nine months a year. The road provides access to Milliken Field where youth soccer games are played.

Selectmen authorized the signs but will wait to hear from Litchfield before any speed bumps are installed.

Worlds End no longer gone to the dogs

A year after unleashed dogs were banned from Worlds End, a spokesman for the reservation said the policy has been accepted, although grudgingly in some cases, and the park is "lots cleaner."

Thomas Foster, Southeast Regional Supervisor for the Trustees of Reservations, said the initial objections to and complaints about the leash policy have subsided, and there is now overwhelming compliance with the regulation.

The requirement that owners clean up after their pets has improved the conditions "like day and night," he said.

Last year, the Trustees imposed the requirement that dogs remained leashed at all times while visiting the park, and that the owners clean up their animals' waste. The Trustees received dozens of complaints about the regulation from dog owners who took their pets to the park to exercise.

"We haven't seen a huge drop in memberships," Foster said, adding that new members have made up for those who did not renew. The number of visitors to the park may have increased because non-dog owners now feel more secure that they will not be accosted by an ill-mannered or over-friendly unleashed pet.

Regular patrols through the park have enforced compliance with the rule. Some people walk their pets to more remote areas of the 250-acre park and let them off their leashes, but as soon as they see park personnel, the dogs are rounded up and leashed again, he said.

However, the Trustees are now "trying to sort out a new user conflict" that involves mountain bikes, Foster said. Bikes whizzing along paths can upset hikers, dog walkers, horseback riders. This has been a problem at Whitney Woods and other Trustees' properties. He noted that these conflicts arise due to the increase in the use of parklands, throughout the region.

Salt House gets license

This week, selectmen renewed the common victualler's (food) license for the Olde Salt House, 40 Border St., Thomas S. Eisenstadt, manager.

Special Town Meeting is slated for Oct. 28

Selectmen set fall's special town meeting for Monday, Oct. 28 which they say will allow enough time in September for boards and departments to submit warrant articles in time to have the warrant printed.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Hat's off to Harborfest raffle winners and donors alike

And the winners are — $500 savings bond: Barbara Anglin of Cohasset; donor, Rockland Trust Company; dinner for two: Ann Bonomi of Scituate; donor, The Chart House; Red Sox tickets: Mary Stenbeck of Cohasset; donor, Barry Waste Services; Minot's Ledge T- and sweatshirts: Jim Shumaker and Ira Stoughton, both of Cohasset; donor, Historical Commission; and Harborfest T-shirt and Minot's Ledge tote bag: Ian Cundall of Cohasset; donor, Historical Commission. The Harborfest Raffle Committee surely made these winners happy, as did the donors! That's great!

Speaking of the Harborfest, wasn't the parade grand? And how about the Art Festival? It seemed as though there was better-than-ever art in all forms in the tent this year! The strawberry shortcake was so yummy that they ran out of biscuits (fair warning for next year — be sure you get there early; their wonderful reputation is now South Shore-wide!) All of the vendors and the crafters did a great job. Have you ever seen so many Dr. Seuss hats in one place? The children's activity tent made every young artist express their creative best, and they loved every minute of it! The performances were outstanding, too. We give Rhonda Myers, coordinator of the Festival on the Common, and her very able crew a huge round of applause and a big thank-you for a wonderful weekend!

Just to let you know how much the AFS program means to those who take part in it, listen to this — Dan Young was an exchange student in the summer of 1964, and he went to Brazil. Recently, his Brazilian brother, Renato Sandri, and his wife called Dan's mom, then stopped by to see Dan's family — Edwin, Sally and Mrs. Young were thrilled to see him!

We hear Dan Pompeo is still winning trophies! His latest one is for being the high scorer in street hockey. You can imagine the extent of the trophy collection in the Pompeo household — what a bunch of athletes!

On May 6 at Brockton High School during the Special Olympics Competition for the Southern Massachusetts area, Matt Kardok received the Elmer P. Ladouceur Competition Scholarship Award. This scholarship was awarded to help further his athletic skills at the Massachusetts State Special Olympic Games. Matt represented Massachusetts at the World Games last summer in New Haven, Conn. He is the son of Barbara and Charles Kardok, Hoover Road. Best of luck, Matt, for many future wins.

Julia Krumholz gets creative in the Kids Tent at the Festival on the Common. For more photos, see page 15.

Congrats to Scott Hadayai, son of Richard and Sheila Hadayai, an 11th-grader at St. Thomas More School, Gardner Lake, Oakdale, Conn., who achieved the distinction of honors for the recently completed third marking term.

Appalachia Service Project volunteers seek donations of children's books to take to Appalachia this month. Used books in good condition should be dropped of at the main office at CHS by June 20. This June 22-30, 84 Cohasset high school students, college CITs and adult advisers will travel to West Virginia to repair homes for needy families. Imagine our Cohasset teenagers sitting on a shady porch during a work break, reading your old favorites to young ones who have few of their own to read! The ASP will leave the books with the families — a gift well appreciated!

On Sunday, May 19, 478 members of the Class of 1996 graduated from Dickinson College in Carlisle, Penn., during the school's 223rd commencement exercises. John McCormick Campbell, son of John W. and Linda M. Campbell, received a bachelor's degree in economics. We congratulate you, John, and wish you the best in the business world!

Rebecca Jenkins gets our vote for the hero(ine) of the month. She was so alert. Rebecca was walking home from her babysitting job when she smelled smoke. She looked around until she found the source, then went to the home, where a youngster was making a sandwich in the kitchen. The smoke was coming from an upper story, and the smoke detector was going off — and Rebecca had to tell him that! Luckily she saved the day, the house and who knows what else!

Kudos to Sandra L. Noble, who received her degree at the 29th annual commencement held at Massasoit Community College.

St. Anselm College in Manchester, N.H. tells us that Lisabeth J. Kondrat, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Richard M. Kondrat, Hesather Drive, earned her degree in psychology from the school. Great!

The University of Vermont notifies us that we have reason to be proud of a student there, too, Jill L. Hamilton, who earned herself a BA in English!

That's the news for this week. We sure hope you will share yours with us — it is as easy as giving me a call at 383-0560. Please put it on your list of things to do!

— Sallyann

Healing seminar at Jade Forest, Saturday June 23

Jade Forest, 130 King St., Route 3A, Cohasset, will offer a mini-seminar on Taoist Chi kung practice on Saturday, June 23, from noon to 1:30 p.m.

Six thousand years ago, the Taoist Masters discovered the six individual sounds whose frequencies matched those of optimally healthy organs. They also learned that by combining the sounds with simple postures to activate an organ's acupuncture meridian, the body could be kept healthy, and the mind more relaxed.

According to John Loupos, chief instructor at Jade Forest, the Six Healing Sounds can be useful in restoring and maintaining calmness in daily life and can minimize the effects of stress on the immune system.

For more information or to register, call John Loupos at 383-6822.

Disney Fans Aroar Over New Lion King Stamps!

Uganda, Africa — Disney fans and collectors are suddenly scrambling to obtain a new Limited Edition 9 stamp set that has just been issued by the African nation of Uganda to commemorate the mega hit animated film, Disney's The Lion King.

"Collector demand for these stamps has been unbelievable," stated John Van Emden of the International Collectors Society and national clearinghouse for Disney collectible stamp issues. "Disney fans and collectors around the world have been waiting for this dramatic news, it seems they've been ready to pounce on the first hint of a Lion King release. In fact, we're nearly sold out."

Collectors are already predicting that in the very near future these Disney stamps will be far more sought after and be more desirable than the U.S. Elvis stamp, the most popular commemorative postage stamp of all time.

"Over 500 million Elvis stamps have been issued. When you compare this to these Lion King stamps, which are a Limited Edition of just thousands, you can see the irresistible appeal that these stamps have to Disney fans," he added.

Each of the 9 stamps is about four times the size of a regular U.S. postage stamp. They're legal for postage in Uganda and are recognized by every postal authority around the world.

Gotta have'em? They are available for a short time at $9.95 (plus $3 postage and handling) for the complete set of nine different colorful stamps, accompanied by an individually numbered ICS Certificate of Authenticity. One-way is okay

We agree with Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown who says the best way to solve the "parking problem" along the North Main Street side of the Town Common is to make the street one-way.

That part of the road is narrow forcing drivers, who park their cars on the Common side of North Main Street, to pull up onto the grass to allow enough space for two-way traffic.

This parking practice has produced an unattractive dirt strip between the sidewalk and granite curbing. The area has completely worn away in places creating a gutter which town officials felt could be hazardous to pedestrians attending the Festival on the Common over the weekend. So as a stopgap measure, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield filled in the area with gravel.

It's no surprise to us that members of the Common Historic District Commission and others don't like the looks of the gravel and want it removed. Selectmen said it will be, once a solution to the "dirt strip" problem is agreed upon.

What is at the root of the problem is parking. If the granite curbing is restored to its original height, should parking along the section of North Main Street between Jason and Long roads be limited to compact cars or eliminated altogether?

Without the ability to pull up onto the dirt strip along the Common as is the case now, cars parked on both sides of the road may create too narrow a roadway for two-way traffic, officials fear.

A one-way traffic pattern around the Common would allow plenty of room for cars to proceed between those parked on both sides of North Main, therefore eliminating the need drivers have to pull up onto the side of the Common. And with the one-way solution, no parking spaces would be lost. Grass could be planted and the granite curbing could be restored.

Oh, there are bound to be complaints at first as people adjust to the change. Circling the Common may be a little less direct and take an extra minute or two out of our day.

But what could be better for the soul — in these modern hurry-hurry times where civility is becoming obsolete — than to skirt the Common, which is beautiful no matter what the season is?

We think forcing drivers to have more appreciation for this town jewel through this one-way pattern would be a positive offshoot to solving the dirt-strip problem.

You may recall, when the "temporary" bridge was being built across the North River on Route 3A between Scituate and Marshfield, drivers had to wait at a light and only one direction of traffic could pass at a time. It was a hassle at first — but many commented afterwards, that the stop provided a moment or two to sit back and enjoy the spectacular view of the North River.

So let's give the one-way traffic pattern a try. After all, we could all use a good dose of Cohasset's uncommon Common in our busy lives.

Strawberry Festival a huge success

To the Editor:

I am writing to publicly thank the hundreds of volunteers and business sponsors who helped make the Festival on the Common, Harborfest and Strawberry Festival a huge success.

On behalf of the Second Congregational Church's Strawberry Festival Committee, I want to thank our church members and friends who dished out more than 1,800 strawberry shortcakes, served more than 1,500 hamburgers and hot-dogs, and more than 3,000 cold drinks, as well as prepared and sold fresh baked goods and Country Store items.

I would also like to thank the companies and individuals who lent vehicles, utensils, and equipment, and gave products for distribution including Ocean Spray and Shaw's Supermarkets, as well as Barry Waste Services who provided the waste dumpster for the event, and A-tel of Boston, who supplied the two-way radios.

Everyone contributed to our success and as a result, our church will be able to give nearly $8,000 to a group of very worthy causes over the next few months.

Thanks again to our residents, visitors and Festival on the Common friends.

Murray says water rate hike unfair

Dear Chairman Howe:

I am extremely concerned with the decision of your department to allow the Hingham Water Company to increase their rates 155 percent. I represent Cohasset, Hingham and Hull and feel that my constituents are being gouged by a company which had planned to build a new facility regardless of any location change.

My constituents from Cohasset have been forced to pay for a sewage pumping station and pipes, etc. for sewage in the lower Jerusalem Road and Hull Street area along with tax increases for a new school, athletic fields and other overrides. These people cannot afford an increase in their water rates of 155 percent! My Hingham constituents are faced with almost the same increases for sewage and overrides in the Rockland Street area! My Hull constituents have a very high tax rate and there is no business to relieve the tax burden in that town.

I have been asked to ask you to please consider all the ramifications of this terrible injustice to my people. Please, please reconsider your decision in regard to the increase granted to the Hingham Water Company.

State Representative

Ed's note: Rep Murray sent this letter to John Howe, chairman of the Dept. of Public Utilities.

Thanks Kathy, for ten great years!

To the Editor:

Can you believe that Kathy Bryanton has been the director of Cohasset Elder Affairs for ten years? Look what she has accomplished. We have a very fine center, two vans, approximately 150 volunteers, a great staff, and many, many programs. Most of all, seniors used to be considered old geezers, with their hands out, always looking for something for nothing. Now we are considered an impressive, homogeneous group of citizens. Homogeneous not because we think alike on all subjects, but because we want what is best for the town.

Last year and the year before, Cohasset seniors were awarded the Silver Dove Award, the highest award the Commonwealth gives to seniors who volunteer their time to help other seniors. The same town receiving this award two years in a row is unheard of. We received these awards, not because we the individuals are so great, but because Kathy makes the snowballs and we throw them.

Pat Ryan says,"Kathy does not ask you to do anything. You just end up volunteering to do it."

The last several years I have traveled all over this state, and no matter where I go, when people hear "Cohasset" they immediately say "Kathy." She is known, respected and liked everywhere. I get the biggest kick out of going to a meeting and other directors have one or two board members, usually women, with them. Then Kathy walks in with about six people from her board, most of them men.

Kathy, you have influenced my retirement so much it is unbelievable. (Guess that it why I went back to work.) I hope in ten more years we both will still be here and I will be able to tell you how wonderful you are and how much I admire you.

Thank you, Kathy, for ten wonderful years. We all love ya.

Design Review Board lists school concerns

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear School Facilities Committee:

The Cohasset Design Review Board is concerned about the direction Cohasset's proposed elementary school project is currently headed. We suggest the town step aside and examine if what is being planned in their name really satisfies Cohasset's site, design and budget needs.

May 1, the Cohasset Design Review Board was invited to attend your School Facilities Committee meeting to meet the architect and start our design review process. Unfortunately, we found there were only a very few early schematic drawings available for us to review. The architects invited us to visit their offices to receive additional drawings, but the visit was not productive as there was little additional material. On May 6, our Board prepared a list of questions and concerns regarding the project and the available drawings (see attached). This list was presented to the School Facilities Committee at your May 8 meeting. At this meeting, we were also invited to review the architect's contract and comment on same. Members of our Board have attended subsequent School Facilities Committee meetings and our impression is that the architect has not addressed these concerns. We feel this is indicative of a larger problem which is that the architect, not the town, is controlling this project using the pressure imposed by the 1996 state funding deadline of June 3 as an excuse to "steamroll" their design on a deficient site through the approval process.

It is the Design Review Board's understanding that June 3 the architect submitted design drawings to the state with the claim that they represented substantial completion of Cohasset's design process, even though the drawings had not been reviewed by the town. It is also our understanding that if the town now wants to make substantial design changes, (i) the architect will charge the town more fees for additional design services, and (ii) the state may not accept the design changes anyway.

The Board's concerns fall into four general areas:

1. Design Review

• The town was not given the opportunity to review the drawings before they were submitted to the state June 3. (The Design Review Board would still like that opportunity.)

• Concerns regarding the early schematic drawings have not yet been addressed.

2. Architect's Contract

• We feel it is a conflict of interest to non-competitively award the $0.67 million design contract to the same architect who prepared the existing conditions report for the Cohasset Public Schools.

• We feel the architect should be required to redesign at his cost if the construction bids come in over budget.

3. Project Budget

• We feel the town needs to critically examine every line item in the project budget to ensure it is all-inclusive, that the town is getting value for the money and that there is sufficient construction contingency for design errors and omission and other unknowns. Note: this architect's recently completed North Attleboro project had at least 7 percent in construction cost extras and their current Andover project already has 10 percent in construction cost extras and still rising, at just 70 percent completion. (Andover is in litigation against the architect.) In the light of this information and the serious deficiencies of the selected site, we suggest a construction contingency of at least 10 percent for the Cohasset project, not 5 percent as currently contemplated. The town will need to rigorously monitor and control expenditures against the budget to avoid cost overruns in the future.

4. Selected Site

• We feel the selected site has serious deficiencies.

a. the usable area for the school is well under state requirements (most of the 70 acre site is wetlands).

b. Outside play areas are minimal (no playing fields).

c. Vehicular access is problematic (shared with Deer Hill School).

d. Surroundings are heavily wooded (claustrophobic).

e. Subgrade conditions are difficult (ledge, water, etc.).

The Design Review Board has visited this architect's recently completed Saltonstall School in Salem, Mass., a state-funded project, where an old brick school building was beautifully renovated and expanded to fit the needs of Salem. In light of the Salem success story and the serious deficiencies of Cohasset's selected site, we suggest the town challenge the state's rejection, and re-examine the possibility of renovating and expanding the Osgood School with teacher parking relocated offsite. If this does not work out, we suggest the town re-evaluate the other 23 sites, originally rejected, now that we know the full extent of deficiencies of the selected site. If after conducting this "due-diligence," the town determines to still go forward with a new school on the selected site, then the specific design concerns in our May 6 list should be addressed.

Clearly Cohasset needs a greatly-improved elementary school facility and your committee and others have made a tremendous effort to get the project to this point. The Design Review Board feels the town (not the architect) should now hire a professional project manager (not a clerk of the works) to provide the skills and strong supervision necessary to complete the project on schedule and within budget. The Design Review Board stands ready to play its part in helping the school facilities committee in this important task.

A. Can You Give Us More Background Information?

1. Shortcomings of existing Osgood School.
2. Criteria for new school.
3. Reasons why other sites rejected.
4. What additional spaces/program are we gaining vs. Osgood.

B. Can We Get Additional Material To Review?

1. Topographic plan (entire site with wetlands mapped).
2. D.D. progress drawings and project manual.
3. Budget line item explanations.

C. These Are Our Preliminary Design Concerns.

1. Density of vehicular traffic. (Shared access.)
2. Lack of outside playgrounds.
3. Overwhelming scale of the design and safety issues for small children.
4. Inadequate natural light in classrooms. Undesirable building orientation.

D. These Are Our Preliminary Budget Concerns.

1. Insufficient contingency $.
2. Excessive special design feature $.
3. Unknown geotechnical condition $.
4. Need to ensure all costs are addressed e.g. sitework, roads, parking, landscaping, drainage, sewage, utilities.
5. Heavy design and engineering costs.

Ed's note: Copies of this letter were sent to selectmen, the advisory board, planning board, conservation commission, sewer commission and school committee. The design Review Board and school facilities committee planned to meet Wednesday, June 19 after the Mariner went to press to discuss the concerns raised in this letter.

State denies legal expense reimbursement

Dear Selectmen:

On behalf of Gov. Weld I am responding to your March 6 letter requesting that the Commonwealth reimburse the town for the costs it expended to conduct a site assignment hearing on the application of the Cohasset Heights Landfill, Ltd (CHL) to expand its landfill. The basis for your claim is that the site assignment procedures under the Solid Waste Act created an unfunded mandate.

While I appreciate that no municipality wishes to expend funds to respond to a development project it does not want built, your reimbursement claim cannot be accepted for several reasons. In the first instance, the principle of unfunded state mandates applies only to laws or regulations taking effect after 1981 which impose additional cost on a municipality (M.G.L. c. 29, s. 27C). Municipalities have been required to conduct public hearings on site assignment of solid waste facilities since 1955 in accordance with the provisions of M.G.L. c. 111, s. 150A. While this law has been amended at various times, the fundamental obligation of the municipality to conduct a hearing and determine if a site assignment is justified has not changed.

Moreover, it appears from your description that many of the expenses were voluntarily assumed rather than being imposed by the statute or regulations. Your Board was not obligated to hire separate counsel or an environmental consulting firm whose fees exceeded the $2,000 per acre fee that DEP's regulations require the proponent to pay the Town to cover such expenses.

Most conclusively, the Supreme Judicial Court has ruled that if an unfunded mandate exists, a municipality's only remedy is to obtain a court order exempting it from compliance. The community is not entitled to recover reimbursement for its costs of compliance.

Your letter also suggests that the site assignment hearing could have been avoided had the landfill moratorium not excluded DEP's site suitability review of the CHL application. The release of the site suitability report before the moratorium was announced in the Solid Waste Master Plan Update was determined by explicit timelines in the site assignment regulations. The timing of the release of the Update was set when policy and editorial reviews, and notice to legislators, was anticipated to be completed.

You also criticize DEP for not aggressively enforcing its regulations. Although you don't describe the instances of CHL's non-compliance, I am aware that DEP has previously fined the operator $10,000 for odor control violations and just last February took enforcement action that led to the operator signing a consent order with Town's Conservation Commission to correct wetlands and storm water runoff problems. If there are on-going enforcement issues that you believe are not being adequately addressed, please feel free to bring the specifics to my attention or contact Bill Gaughan, NERO Regional Director, at (617) 932-7600.

I realize that this response does not provide you with the relief you request but I hope it adequately explains the rationales beyond the denial of reimbursement and the timing of the moratorium. If you have any further questions please let me know.

Hats off to McNabb, health board

To the editor:

In my opinion the citizens of Cohasset owe a large debt of gratitude to John McNabb and his S.A.F.E. organization in stopping the expansion of the Cohasset Heights landfill.

Admittedly, John had a lot of expert assistance, but it was his dogged determination and persistence that brought about a victory for Cohasset. Without John's guidance the final decision could very well have gone the other way.

Also, the board of health is to be congratulated for having the courage to do the right thing.

Selectmen scolded over ballot snafu

Dear Board Members:

As you know, the Committee on Local Affairs voted to validate the vote on your override question with the understanding that the town will take all necessary steps to avoid future posting irregularities.

The committee remains concerned that the Town of Cohasset did not follow the procedure required by Chapter 39, Section 10, with regard to the publication of notice for the April 6, Proposition 2-1/2 override.

Rep. Murray of Cohasset, a respected, long-time member of the Committee on Local Affairs, is a former Selectwoman who has a great deal of expertise in local issues. I share her concern that the committee has been asked to validate 15 similar types of technical irregularities in the last few years. The numbers are growing, and the willingness of the committee to validate town voting results despite noncompliance with the posting statute may be curtailed in the future.

We hope that the Cohasset Board of Selectmen will promptly institute proper procedures for posting and ensure their implementation.

Rep. Marie J. Parente, Chairwoman
Committee on Local Affairs

Ed's note: Rep. Parente sent this June 11 letter to selectmen.

Students to serve Saturday suspensions next year

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

For many students, in-school suspensions mean a lot of time out of class.

High School Principal Curtis Collins intends to change that.

"Many of the students who go (to in-school suspension) on a regular basis can least afford to be there," he said.

With the support of the school committee and the school council, Collins will institute a program next September that keeps students in class, and imposes disciplinary measures at the same time.

How? By taking away the students' treasured possession: their Saturday morning and by also involving their parents.

A parent will be called if their son or daughter has received an in-school suspension and will be given the choice of having their child attend a Saturday session or serve the one-day suspension at home.

Collins said that parental support and cooperation is very important.

He added that the loss of a Saturday coupled with parent involvement weeds out certain students.

"It is a great deterrent for middle America because Saturday in-school is not looked at as the place to be," said Collins during Tuesday's school committee meeting. "It stops a lot of nonsense with (students) pushing the system."

Collins said that with his work in other systems he has found the Saturday session to be successful.

In the past, in-school suspension in Cohasset was held once a week, usually on Wednesdays, from 7:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

'It is a great deterrent for middle America because Saturday in-school is not looked at as the place to be.'
— Principal Curtis Collins.

The idea was that the students, averaging from three to six in number, spent the day in a classroom with a substitute teacher doing classroom assignments.

It didn't always work out that way, said Collins. Oftentimes the logistics of picking up the work from the student's five or more teachers and delivering it to the classroom wasn't effective.

With the Saturday program, which runs from 8 to 11 a.m., the students don't have to make up the work, and they have a supervised session to do out-of-class assignments.

The Saturday in-school suspension teacher will be a faculty member acting as a paid volunteer, and will help students with assignments if they have questions.

Curtis said that he expects to have no problems having enough faculty sign up for the Saturday session.

The program has no budget implications because the money designated for hiring a substitute will be used for the teachers who serve on a rotating basis.

The program doesn't run on long weekends or on the Saturday before a vacation.

A notice of the change will be sent out to parents and will also be detailed in the Student Handbook.

"I certainly endorse this idea. I think it is something we should support," said Superintendent Stephen Hart.

Once the project gets off the ground, Collins will provide the school committee with a progress report.

An added bonus, he said, is that the program cuts down on infractions, which range from fighting to getting caught smoking several times.

In other business, the committee:

• confirmed that the plans for the new school had been reviewed by the school facilities committee and Supt. Hart and were submitted to the state by the June 5 deadline.

After the Mariner went to press, the facilities committee met with abutters and other concerned citizens at Deer H[illegible] School Wednesday at 6 p.m. to walk th[illegible] proposed school site.

The conservation commission will have a hearing on the school proposal Thursday at Town Hall.

• received a report from Massachusetts Association of School Committees representative Jim Hardy. Hardy spoke about issues at the state level.

• approved a one-year maternity leave for Deer Hill teacher Elizabeth Leonard.

Graphic grade crossing video shown

Members of the Coastal Coalition, the grass-roots group opposed to restoration of the train, showed a video to selectmen this week depicting death and disasters at railroad grade crossings.

Although the video, which featured a cable television "Investigative Reports" program entitled "Danger on the Rails" on the perils at grade crossings was not about Greenbush, a Coalition member interjected Greenbush information on slides interspersed throughout the five-minute film.

Coalition member Janyce Brown asked selectmen to oppose Greenbush.

"We are extremely concerned. It's unsafe and the projected ridership does not justify the cost," she said.

She asked selectmen to re-read the Draft Environmental Impact Report (an environmental feasibility study on Greenbush); to write a letter asking the state Inspector General to look into the "wasteful" spending associated with Greenbush; and to co-sign a letter that Hingham selectmen will send to Gov. William Weld asking him to reconsider his decision to back Greenbush restoration.

Cohasset selectmen took the matter under advisement.

WHEN JOSHUA'S PARENTS

BROUGHT HIM TO CHILDREN'S, WE

IMMEDIATELY TREATED THE

RAPID BREATHING, RACING PULSE

AND POUNDING HEARTBEAT.

AND THEN WE TREATED JOSHUA.

The emergency room can be a frightening experience. For the parents as well as the child.

That's why when someone like Joshua is rushed to Children's, we also begin to work with the parents. We know there is perhaps nothing more excruciating than a parent sitting in a waiting room, numbly flipping through magazines, imagining the worst.

Our staff makes it a point to keep parents informed. Before, during, and after any type of procedure, we make sure the parents are involved. For instance, if your child undergoes surgery, there's a special nurse who's available to you the entire time. And we take care of all the important details too, even having rocking chairs by a child's bedside to make the watching and waiting easier; a parent can also spend the night in the child's hospital room. The point is, we make your experience here at the hospital as comfortable as possible, because that's exactly what you, as a parent, need more than anything when your child requires emergency care.

Joshua, 11, was brought to Children's Emergency Services suffering from an asthma attack. When his attack led to respiratory arrest, he was transferred to the intensive care unit. To relax his airways and improve his breathing, Joshua was given medication and placed on a ventilator; remarkably, within a few days, he was able to return home and back to school. When children like Joshua spend time at Children's Hospital, we try to make the parents as comfortable as possible, even having a rocking chair near the child's bedside.

Children's Hospital helps children and their families from Boston, New England, and the rest of the world. If the need ever arises, we are here to help you.

41st annual art festival is pure magic

By ALISON COHEN
Cohasset Mariner

Once upon a time men and women chipped away at rocks or daubed paint on the walls of caves. They carved and painted their hopes and dreams and painted out their fears. They traced their handprints in pigment to show they existed. They were called magicians and seers and visionaries.

The magicians and seers and visionaries are still among us. They still translate what they see, believe, hope and fear into paint and rock to show they have passed this way. We call them artists. Last weekend the works of their hands graced the interior of a tent on Cohasset Common rather than the rocky walls of our ancestors' caves.

For those who were onlookers in the tent, the magic is in the flash of recognition or the sense of wonder at the many ways reality can be translated or transformed into image. It may have been the 41st annual South Shore Art Center's Festival on the Common, but this celebration of the artistic urge truly goes back tens of thousands of years.

Some artists strip away the non-essential, the superficial until only line and shape and — perhaps — nothing but color remains. Others capture every nook and cranny, every fold and wrinkle of what they see to put life before us in exquisite detail. Still others embellish, embroider and occasionally finagle with computer technology to create a reality beyond the eye and into the realm of the mind's eye.

It was a dizzying, dazzling display of art that greeted festival goers.

Mary Felton's charcoal, "Moon Shadows," captured the midnight chill of trees in a deep snow where it's always winter and never Christmas. Felton took first prize in the drawing and pastel division of the juried art show. And for cold, you can't beat Christian M. Alexander's "Garden Gate in Winter, The Fenway." This stippled graphite captures the lines of a broken tree and picket fence caught in a blizzard's white-out conditions.

Felton's simple, elegant black and white portrait of a forest and Alexander's rich, if spare, textures contrast strongly with Mary Lizotte's nearby riotous tablescape of flowers and china and tablecloth in splashy, springy hues of pinks and greens and yellows. Lizotte's watercolor was entitled "The Queen's Tears." Lizotte's work took second prize in the water color division.

If Felton and Alexander represent the winter solstice and Lizotte is our springtime choice, the obvious winner for the autumn season would have to be Jeremy Barnard's mixed media triptych, "Pontius Pilate" with its views of three scarecrows and the fields of jack-o-lanterns they try to protect.

Wandering a little further down the tent revealed the sun-baked beach house in Paula Whalen's oil painting, "The Bermaken." If Bermaken seems like a terribly familiar scene of South Shore summers, Robert Laney takes the viewer to another place: the Caribbean splendors of the Cayman Islands.

Laney's "A Cayman Christmas" with its scene of a deserted marketplace with palm trees, lattice and a door hung with a huge candy-cane-red ribbon won first prize in the watercolor division. Layman also won a special award for excellence in the member's exhibition for "Cayman Heritage Museum." This painting dazzled the eye with its sun-bleached building and the sign that reads "A Visit is a Must." It also begs the question how the pastel blue-green of Laney's doors can still seem sharp and pristine.

The play of tropical sunlight on objects below was also at work in Tom Lucas' "Shadow Keeper." Lucas took first prize in the oil and acrylic division of the juried show for his rendering of Mexican figurines on a terra cotta tiled floor and the shadows they cast. While Laney gave us a straight-ahead view, Lucas chose an oblique angle as though we were the sun as well as the viewer.

Michele Meister went to Georgia O'Keefe country and came home to capture her "Desert Memories" in an award-winning if tiny monotype. Meister's cacti inhabit a far-reaching desert prairie below an endless and impossibly blue Southwestern sky. The lack of a sense of heat rising off Meister's monotype make it seem more memory than moment, unlike the pieces by Lucas and Laney.

Dorit Flowers muse also went south, down Mexico way, to give us "Belles Artes, Mexico." Her veranda in deep shadow and pots of flowers in strong sunlight showed the interplay between light and shadow, heat and cool. Flowers won third prize for this watercolor.

Flowers showed us a porch of a different sort in "Autumn Glow." In this watercolor, Flowers paints a Victorian wrap-around porch overlooking the crisp color and cool air of a New England autumn. Flowers received an honorable mention in the members' exhibition for this piece.

Artists and their models were the topic of several pieces in the juried show. Richard Abbott took second prize in the drawing and pastel division for his ink and colored pencil rendering of an art class at work. The sinuous lines of his drawing and the cartoon-y simplicity of its rendering made seem a hub-bub of creativity. This piece was aptly and obviously named "Artists & Models.

In contrast, Eileen Rotty took a more serene, focused look at a single model, rendered in charcoal, for her "Seated Nude #2. The model seemed caught in the fleeting moment between impressionism and realism. Rotty took third prize in the drawing and pastel division.

Variations in portraiture were never more apparent than at the art festival. Jane Bregoli's oil painting of "The Vietnam Veteran" seems more real than reality. Her subject stares out of the canvas, decked out in his POW/MIA tattoo and leather jacket. His gaze is steady, but the eyes seem haunted and the viewer thinks, "I've seen him before." Bregoli won Best of Show for this unflinching portrait.

Equally compelling is Dorothy Krause's digital collage, "Lady of Flowers." This large portrait reminds us of every immigrant and refuge we've ever seen on television wrapped up in the image of an elderly woman in a babushka. Krause won a well-deserved first prize in the mixed-media/3D division for her "Lady . . . "

The other winners in the mixed media/3D division went to Michael McNabb for the sensuous limestone forms of "Stone Dream" that defied the visitor not to touch and Alys Myers' "Kinetic Table" a whimsical assemblage of manhole cover, heavy duty spring, watchamacallits and — in the words of one observer — "old broken parts."

Texture, color and shape informed the work of Eleanor LeBlanc's monotype, "A Deep Personance," Suzanne Archibald's oil, "Resolution," and Joan McSweeney's monoprint, "Palmer Method."

Roz Farbush is a perennial favorite at every local art show. She didn't disappoint this time either.

Farbush claimed third prize for her acrylic, "Bench Watching." This big, bold painting of spectators is rendered in Farbush's signature palette with its French's mustard yellows, vinyl siding blues and crayon box greens.

Jane Bregoli's oil painting of "The Vietnam Veteran" seems more real than reality. Her subject stares out of the canvas, decked out in his POW/MIA tattoo and leather jacket. His gaze is steady, but the eyes seem haunted and the viewer thinks, "I've seen him before." Bregoli won Best of Show for this unflinching portrait.

Since this is the South Shore, it wouldn't be an art exhibit without at least one award-winning seascape. Susan DeMichele provided it for the members' exhibition. DeMichele's "Pemaquid Morning" is a dramatic pastel of a rocky coast when the sea is calm and the lighthouse and pointed firs are indistinct in the misty morning fog.

The ocean in a different mood was the subject of Carol Sullivan's watercolor, "Storm Surf." Sullivan shows us the foam and crash of huge waves thrown up against a rocky coast.

Although Cohasset is best known for its mansions overlooking the sea, Patricia McCarthy chose to paint a less imposing house on Parker Avenue. Her watercolor look at the ocher clapboards, green roof and gray garage earned her a special award for excellence.

Getting it right is always a challenge for an artist. Maureen Stebbins did it with her vase of jewel-colored dahlias on an elaborated patterned cloth as did Virginia Allen, who captured the play of light on cobalt, turquoise and clear glass in a sunny window. And interesting companion piece to Allen's "The Gifts" is Christine Hotarek's photograph, "Vintage Glass."

Some claim the camera never lies, but the photographs in the festival make it clear that what transpires between the camera lens and the subject owes everything to the artist's sensibility.

Black and white or color, tight focus or panoramic view, crisp print or soft are all choices that change everything while changing nothing. Photographers also have technology available to them that lets them play with their images until they have created a view of reality that measures up to their artistic vision.

Ann Falcone took Best in Show for "Charon's Harvest," a digitally altered photograph. Falcone shows us a view of hell through the eyes of Vietnam era soldiers in a piece that shows us the flip side of the familiar — and heroic — image of Washington crossing the Delaware.

Kristin Hand took first prize for her black & white photograph, "Interior Design I." Hand's long shot shows us a young woman reaching up into a cupboard in a galley kitchen with the dining area beyond.

In contrast to this quiet, home-based scene, J. Paul MacDonald turned his camera on the crowd during a South Boston St. Patrick's Day Parade. A gaggle of young adults appears to be having a grand time in front of a classic three-decker, but a closer view shows that the revelers are expressing their contempt for a passing group of paraders in an age-old gesture. MacDonald won another second prize, this time in the color division, for a portrait of three young girls caught in the act of writing in chalk on a brick wall in "Lake Providence, Louisiana."

Third prize in the black & white division and first prize in the color division went to photographer Leigh Marion Stephens. Stephens' third prize photo was of a still life entitled "Palladium Bottles." Here, form, line and texture were the focus. Stephens' color photograph was a richer, more complex composition of a shrouded figure and a chair in the midst of a leaf-strewn forest that she dubbed, "Lady in Waiting."

Sean Enright also chose the textures and shapes of nature in his photograph of a narrow path between a rock and the ocean. Enright's long perspective on the meandering path leads the eye to the doorway of a small Irish cottage "Along the Irish Coast."

Honorable mentions in the juried photography exhibition went to Marie H. Doland for her close-up on the curled forms of tree bark, Richard Alemian for a bunch of radishes that would make even carnivores drool and Julie Hawkins-Burnham's images within repeating images that is redolent of fun-house fun and games.

Lynne Layman merited a special award for excellence in the member exhibition for her photograph of "Gary's Shirt." Layman chose to focus on the just the torso of her subject to give us "Gary's Shirt." The rich blue verging on violet of the shirt is set off by the sprig of vivid yellow flowers in the pocket.

The photographs, paintings, drawings and sculptures on display covered a whole spectrum of possibilities. And just maybe, someone left Cohasset Common for home and picked up a pen, a brush or a hunk of clay and discovered the artist within us all. For an artist's hidden gift is the inspiration and sense of wonder it triggers in turn.

Annual event draws all ages

If the shortcake didn't lure the children to the festival, then it must have been the various puppet shows on the center stage. There was even a special area, the creativity tent, designed exclusively for children to paint, sculpt, and learn different ways of expressing themselves through art. Some were lucky enough to make their own puppets for use in one of the shows.

By 3 p.m., the sirens sounded as the Harborfest Marching Parade made its way down North Main Street. Oncoming traffic was rerouted successfully just as the parade came upon the common. Marching bands flanked both ends of the parade, offering a seamless flow of music and entertainment as the floats ambled along. Even the Hingham militia took time out of their "patrols" to show their support for the festival. All was relatively peaceful until a Minuteman announced "Ready, aim, fire," and a score of rifle shots boomed in the air, startling many an onlooker.

The festival carried on through the late afternoon and early evening with performances and music emanating from the center stage. At 7 p.m. artists began packing their belongings and groups of people slowly began boarding the trolley. During this melancholy time when we said goodbye until next year, there were reports that a man resembling Norman Rockwell had been seen strolling the perimeter of the common.

Though no hard evidence has surfaced of this alleged sighting and witnesses declined comment, we should know in a year or so the validity of the reports. For if paintings depicting various couples and families enjoying themselves in front of Cohasset Town Hall should suddenly surface in the main tent next year, then Mr. Rockwell, or maybe his spirit, definitely graced the common this Sunday.

Local lobstermen are opposed to Fear depletion of resource

By JENNIFER R. HORAN
Cohasset Mariner

Massachusetts lobstermen await the passage of a bill that would limit the number of lobsters caught each week by dragger fisherman who, they say, could irrevocably damage the resource.

Lobstermen fear that because of a much depleted ground fish population, draggermen — who drag large nets along the ocean floor to catch fish — may direct their attention to lobster, one of the state's most valuable resources at $3 per pound.

"Lobster is the state's single-most valuable species," said Bill Adler, executive director of the Scituate-based Massachusetts Lobstermen's Association. "We don't need this to push it over. The lobster is still a viable resource and it needs to be kept that way."

Because these crustaceans travel in herds, they are much easier for draggers to target with their all-encompassing nets, he pointed out.

"I want to see the targeting of lobsters by draggers ended," Adler said.

Commercial lobstermen from Massachusetts, the second largest producer of lobster in the country and third in the world, would like to follow the example of Canada and Maine, who rival the Bay State in the lobster industry.

Canada forbids dragging for lobster anywhere in its waters, while Maine prohibits draggers from bringing lobster into any of its ports. Therefore, traps, or lobster pots, are the only permitted device for harvesting lobsters for these top two producers of Homarus Americanus, the American Lobster.

"The better way to catch lobsters is with traps,"Adler said. "They're a passive catching device. A trap inflicts less damage on the species than the dragging method. With a net, (lobsters) don't have a choice."

A state law banning lobster dragging in state waters has not stopped draggermen from targeting lobster, Adler said, because they can catch as much lobster as they please in federal waters, just three miles out. So rather than controlling where lobsters are caught, Massachusetts lobstermen are hoping to control lobster-dragging activity by limiting the number which can be brought into port.

'I want to see the targeting of lobsters by draggers ended.'
— Bill Adler, executive director of the Massachusetts Lobstermen's Association.

Massachusetts lobstermen proposed an all-out ban on bringing dragger-caught lobster into Massachusetts ports but state officials have stated that an all-out ban would be impossible. So lobstermen settled for what they consider a "very generous" compromise of a 50-lobster a day dragger allowance (350 lobsters per week).

That proposal passed the Senate in January, but was amended in the House's Committee on Natural Resources to allow 150 lobsters a day (750 per week).

This version of the legislation has not yet hit the House floor, said State Re[illegible] Frank Hynes (D-Marshfield).

"It's a hopelessly complicated issue," said William M. Straus (D-Mattapoisett), a member of the Committee on Natural Resources. "Draggers say there should be no limit, lobstermen say there should be an all-out ban. It's not easy to find something in between that everyone can agree on."

Hynes supports a compromise on limiting the landing of lobsters taken by dragging apparatus, but not an all-out ban.

"I oppose an all-out ban because I feel it's unfair to the traditional, legitimate draggerman," Hynes said.

"A limit of zero lobsters is unrealistic and unenforceable," said Straus. "There is no way that Massachusetts can have control over what goes on in federal waters."

Because the federal government has taken no steps toward restricting dragging for lobster in federal waters, Adler explained, this bill aims to curtail it on the state level.

dragging for lobsters

Massachusetts doesn't believe that the harvesting of lobsters by a dragger is an appropriate way to harvest this particular species," said Adler, a Marshfield resident, who became a lobsterman in 1963. "This type of harvesting method for lobsters is devastating on this particular species."

Adler has fished, dragged and gillnetted.

"It isn't anything against dragger fisherman. The issue here is the way lobsters are being harvested, not who does it."

Dragging vessels gather lobsters, sometimes thousands in one tow, with everything the net catches from the bottom of the ocean. The draggerman raises the net and empties the catch onto the deck to be sorted.

"A lot of the small and soft-shelled lobsters can't survive the dragging," Adler said. "They get thrown back in and dragged up again. They bang together with rocks and the lobsters fight each other."

When a dragger fisherman drags for fish, inevitably a few lobsters will get swept up in the process, otherwise known as a "by-catch."

But now that the groundfish has been depleted, Adler believes draggermen will abandon dragging specifically for fish and instead concentrate on targeting lobster.

"This redirection is a problem," Adler said. "I'm worried that the redirection onto lobsters will continue and perhaps even get worse. It could do a lot of damage to the resource and the proof is that everything the dragger has touched so far has become problematic."

"It's conceivable that (redirection) could happen," said longtime dragger fisherman Frank Mirarchi of Scituate. "The problem stems from the ground fish being in big trouble."

While Mirarchi opposes an all-out ban on the landing of dragger-caught lobster in Massachusetts, he called the proposed 150-lobster limit "reasonable."

"I would not want to see draggers eliminated from catching lobsters," said Mirarchi. "Bringing the number down to zero would not be a good idea."

Mirarchi, a dragger since 1963 who fishes almost exclusively in federal waters, catches a couple hundred lobsters per day during peak seasons, the spring and the fall, he said. Though not the main source of his income, he counts on lobster to complement his yearly catch.

"I haven't depleted the lobster resource," Mirarchi said. "I'm not targeting lobsters. I'm maintaining the balance I've always had."

Rep. Straus said that "non-pot" landings of lobsters —including drag fishing — have accounted for less than 5.9 percent of all landings, or one million lobsters, in Massachusetts since 1975.

"Draggers place their emphasis on fish," said Straus. "They only target lobsters at certain times of the year, when the fishing is slow."

Straus said the recent depletion of fishing resources coupled with new federal limitations on the number of fishing days allowed may cause draggermen to turn more to lobsters.

"If draggers' landings of lobster went up more than six percent, I would recommend further restrictions," Straus said. He said the progress would be monitored and discussions on the issue would remain open.

As for displaced draggermen, Adler has what he described as a less than perfect solution.

"I have no problem with extra competition from lobstermen," he said. "If you're that hard up, join us."

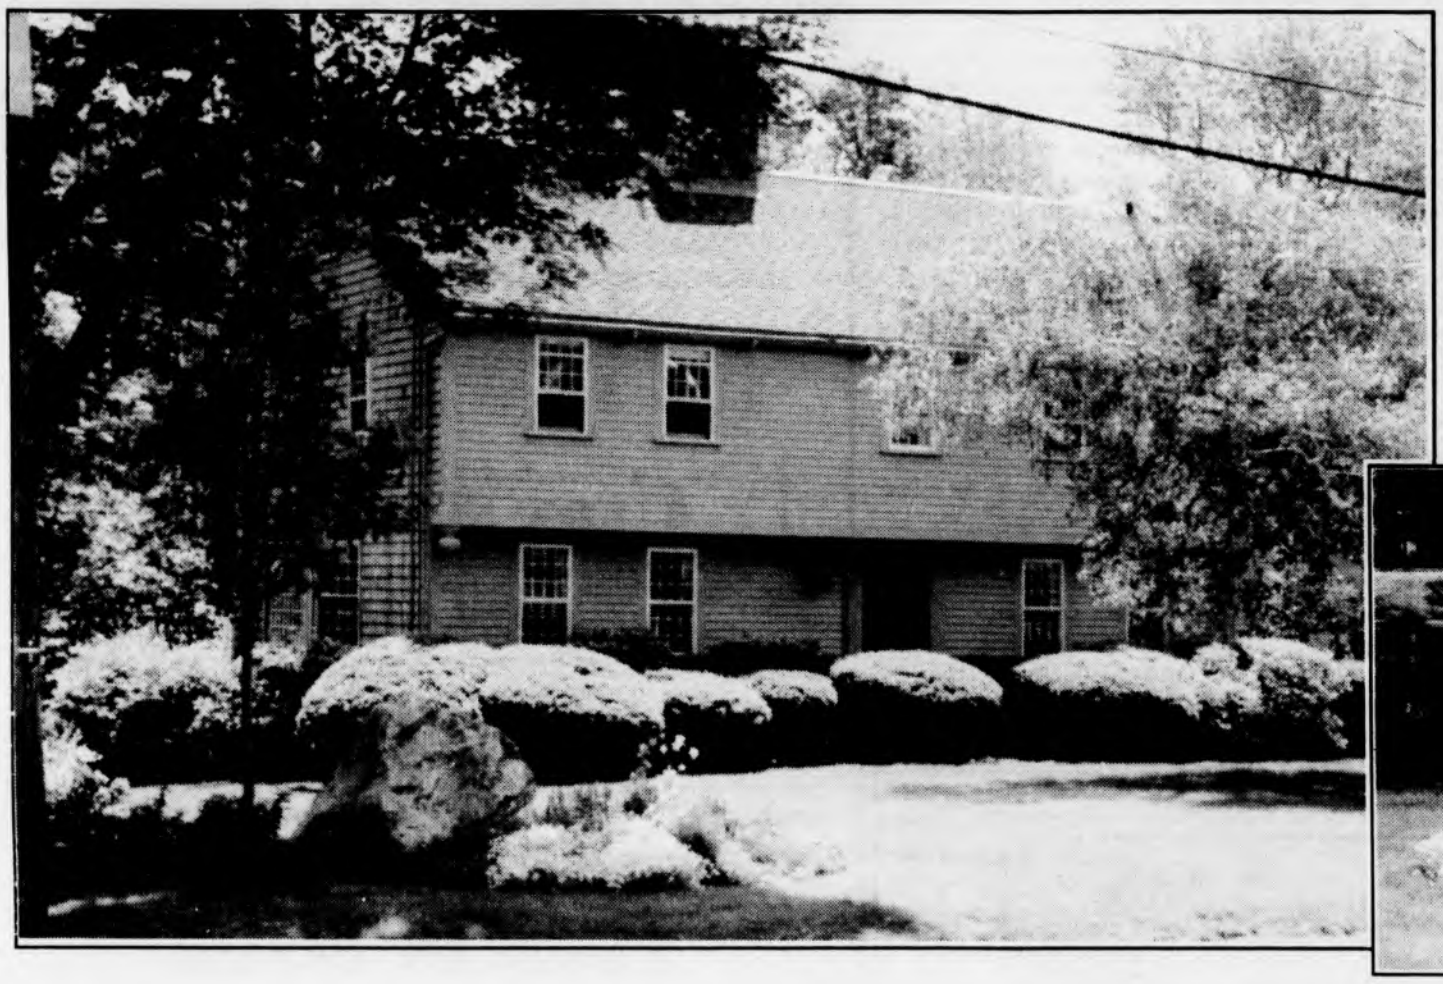
The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863



Since moving to Cohasset a few years ago, Linda Simms at 15 Windy Hill Rd. has worked diligently to create a perennial English garden in her yard. Using a large rock with an interesting shape as the central focal point in the perennial bed, Linda created a lovely springtime palette of color by artfully mixing flowering shrubs with perennials. Pale lavender lilac add height while purple and white Alyssum, purple Cat Mint, pale yellow Columbine, purple Balloon Flower, bright pink Armeria, pale purple Phlox, bright white Snow-in-Summer, chartreuse Lady's Mantle and pink Forget-Me-Not bloom in abundance.

Legion aims for success

Cohasset squad building for coming seasons

By DAN WHITE
Special to the Mariner

The summer nights on the South Shore seem to be heating up as American Legion baseball has once again begun a new season. A league for 16-18 year olds, American Legion is a step above high-school baseball. The league is a melting pot of high-school baseball talent, which combines the best players from public, private and parochial schools from around the area.

Due to the increasing interest and affection towards the Legion baseball program, more and more people are trying to get involved. Once such person is John Carr, who along with others, founded a Legion squad this year. For over three years he had been lobbying for a berth in the league. Finally, this year he was granted one. Already active in Little League, Carr set out to build a program which would grow as new talent was harvested.

With the help of his friends and assistant coaches Bob Moody, Scott Arnold, Garrett Hunt and Paul St. John, Carr had to then evaluate and recruit talent from area high schools. He and his team of assistants spoke with coaches to see where the talent was, and also spoke to the players themselves. The coaching team tried to get an idea of the interest that they were going to get in their quest to build a strong program. As it turned out, the interest was so strong that more than a few cuts had to be made, but the team selected seemed to be up to the challenge that faced them in their inaugural season.

The team selected was taken solely from Cohasset and Scituate, but ranged through many different area schools such as B.C. High and Xaverian. The total came to 12

Olympic champion's main rival was himself

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

His competitive racing career lasted just five year's, but Cohasset's Herb Elliot accomplished more in that short period of time than most world-class track and field athletes do over their entire careers.

Elliot, who represented the Australian Olympic team in the 1960 Rome Games, is still the only gold medal winner ever to set a world record in the finals of the 1,500 meters. Elliot, the overwhelming favorite heading into the games ran a 3:35.6, earning him the top step on the platform during the medal ceremony.

Probably even more impressive than his Rome victory, Elliot retired in 1961 at the ripe age of 22, unbeaten in both the mile and 1,500, making him far and away, the greatest middle-distance runner of his era.

But as satisfying as the win was for Elliot in the Olympics, he hardly enjoyed his experience. As the overwhelming favorite to win, anything less than a gold medal would have been viewed as a disappointment, not so much by Elliot than by his countrymen.

Elliot says he was never one to become preoccupied with the accomplishments of others or how he placed in races. His main focus centered on improving his own times. Elliot did that to the tune of a personal best 3:54.5 time in the mile.

"My objective was to defeat my own weaknesses, rather than defeat someone else," Elliot said. "Your sport becomes a way of life. I developed the philosophy that running was part of the person, rather than a device where you ran faster than someone else.

"I was never a great follower of the sport. I never showed that type of interest in the sport."

As indifferent as Elliot was to the times his competitors were churning out, he was the complete opposite when it came to his training under famed coach Percy Ceruty. Elliot credits Ceruty, one of the pioneers of middle- and long-distance training techniques, for much of his success.

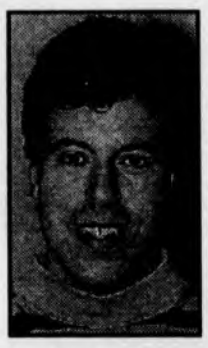
EXTRA POINTS/Joe Reardon

On the diamond, little separates pros from youngsters



Reardon

The pitcher takes a good hard look at the signs the catcher is flashing with his fingers. He checks the runner on first base and delivers the pitch. The batter bounces a slow ground ball to the second baseman and the infielder charges it and throws to the shortstop, who is covering second. The shortstop steps on the bag and leaps into the air as the runner tries to break up the double play. It's too late, however, as his strong throw to first gets the batter by a step.

A major league play for sure, only this isn't pro ball. It's Little League.

It has always fascinated me, that, from a minor league squad on the South Shore, right on up to the defending world champion Atlanta Braves, it is the ability to make the fundamental plays in baseball which ultimately make the major difference between winning and losing.

Take this year's Red Sox for example. Forget the torrid hitting of Mo Vaughn, Jose Canseco and company. On the whole, the Sox have been atrocious in the field, and that includes Vaughn, who is a less-than-average first baseman.

It's also fun to watch 8 and 9 year olds going through the same rituals chniques, for much of his success.

"It was one of those lucky things were I was fortunate to be on this earth at the same time as him," Elliot philosophized.

Rather than putting in high-mileage endurance training, Elliot concentrated more on shorter runs with high intensity. The longest he ran was an hour, but it was done at a break-neck pace. Elliot's interval training was done at a pace which complemented what he'd be doing in a race. The training suited him and he rarely was surprised by a competitor during a race.

"I'd practice what I wanted to do in my race when I trained," Elliot said. "You have to get your body used to what it has to do."

In Rome, Elliot wasn't able to witness the pageantry and extravagance of the games. He was there to do a job and it consisted of racing 3-3/4 laps as fast as he could in the shape he was in.

When Elliot hit the finish line, the winner, his first feeling was one of relief, not euphoria. He was glad the Olympics were finally over and he could relax again.

"You don't enjoy it at all, up until your own event because you are focused on what you have to do," Elliot said.

It was easy for Elliot to walk away from racing when he was merely 22, an infant in track by today's standards. An athlete of Elliot's calibre didn't have the endorsement possibilities in the 1960's that are so prevalent today.

"In those days it was a totally amateur sport," he said. "You'd do your runs at the beginning of the work day or after."

Elliot has been able to enjoy the spirit of the Olympics more as an official for the Australian team, free of the pressure of racing for first place.

But it's his new home in Cohasset that Elliot truly cherishes.

"It's one of God's special places," he said. "The town has everything; the ocean, friendly people, beautiful forests, estuaries."

Elliot paused for a moment then added with a laugh, "And it has Lobsters."

The Purple People Beaters finish up

By RONNIE MCMORRIS
Special to the Mariner

The Purple People Beaters finished their season last Thursday night with a win over the hard-hitting Ad-Gurus. Frannie Noble sparked a mid-game rally with a well-hit triple. Ashley Faber, whose bat was hot all season, kept the rally alive, along with solid hitting performances by Kelly Hurley, Sarah Lambert and Jessie O'Connell. Rookies Courtney Hurley and Miranda Lanzillotti, who just returned from the injured list, also hit the ball well. Rookie Molly Kirks has developed into a fine ball player.

Outstanding plays in the field were turned in by Sarah McMorris and Corey Eveands. What a double play! Leah McMorris, with her strong arm at third, and Julia Scribner, behind the plate, made for some fine plays as well. Gillian Simons kept the defense strong with good backup in the outfield.

The Purple People Beaters turned in fine performances all around and managed to win without the help of Lisa Spirito, who hit the ball well all season!

players from Cohasset and six from Scituate. Looking to build for the future, five 15 year olds were included on the team, which was rounded out by seven 16 year olds, three 17 year olds and three 18 year olds.

Since Cohasset is in reality an island of Norfolk County, Carr had two options in choosing the league that his team would play in. He could either join the Norfolk County League which includes perennial powerhouses Morrissette, Braintree and Weymouth or the Plymouth County League, which is generally strong but lacks the talent pool that the Norfolk County teams have. It seems from the descriptions that the Plymouth County League would be a perfect fit for a fledgling team like Cohasset, but this team of coaches was always looking in terms of the long run. The Norfolk County teams would offer higher competitions on which Cohasset could build a solid program, once which might eventually be able to compete consistently on that level.

From the first day of practice, Carr expressed to his players his philosophy that everyone gets a chance to play. In developing a better team, Carr wanted to get experience for a many players as he could. He put this philosophy to good use as all 18 players started at least one game before the team was even seven games into the season.

In the first game of the season, however, Cohasset was matched up against Morrissette, arguably the best team in the league. This did not bode well for the expansion club as it lost, 5-2. The team then lost to Weymouth, but in the third game, Cohasset played Quincy tough. Cohasset took a 7-1 lead into the sixth inning before succumbing to a late rally by Quincy to lose, 8-7. following three more losses, one of which was to Braintree, the team took on Quincy for the second time. This time the Cohasset club looked toward Matt Lewis to stop the string of six straight loses. In the extra-inning battle, Lewis pitched all eight innings and kept the Quincy bats at bay while Cohasset's bats came alive in the eighth to take the win. Carr was naturally happy with the result and applauded the team on a full-team effort.

As the season stands now, the Cohasset team has a record of 1-6, but the squad remains positive. Carr acknowledges that the young team is going through some "growing pains" right now, but his outlook on the future includes a picture of a new powerhouse within the Norfolk League, a team on which he could look and proudly say he helped found. In the end, his "suicide practices" on Saturday morning will pay off as each year progresses and his team continues to grow, just as the entire Legion program has. To all the 13-year-old ball players around the Cohasset area: appreciate the team on the field now, for you will reap the benefits down the road.

American Legion baseball is a very special league. It combines all elements of sportsmanship, competition and fair play. The league is often a springboard for young prospects and talents, but that is not its main concern. The mission of the league is to provide a high level of baseball to those who can compete in an atmosphere that should be enjoyable and fulfilling, no matter if one's team is winning or losing. In its first season, the Cohasset Legion baseball team is living up to that ideal.

Little separates pros from youngsters

as major league players when they bat. The kids enter the batter's box, dig in, and then it's time to play Carlton Fisk.

Fisk was always one to take his sweet old time before taking his whacks. Little Leaguers are much the same way. They adjust their batting gloves, knock the dirt off their spikes, check the signs the third-base coach is going through and then take their practice swings.

And just like the pros, youngsters will flash the umpire a glaring look of disbelief and mumble to themselves when they feel a called-strike was, fill in the blank: (a) too high (b) too low (c) outside (d) inside (e) a and c (f) b and d (g) b and c, or (f) a and d.

When batters rap a base hit, they make the turn at first base just in case the ball is bobbled and there is a chance to advance. When they return to first they take off their batter's gloves and tuck them in their back pocket as the first-base coach congratulates them on the hit. Nothing different in the Major Leagues.

Even the most exciting plays in baseball are taught much the same way at both levels. The hit and run, run and hit, suicide squeeze and double steal are used in the Majors and in Little League with varying degrees of success.

And you can't forget, every fan loves a rally. Just when all looks lost for the home team, a couple of base hits can breath new life into both the players and fans alike. You can see the other team get nervous just through its body language and the coach becomes all the more vocal in barking out where his players should be.

Whether the competition includes Frank Thomas, Ken Griffey Jr., Mike Piazza, Cal Ripken Jr., or a crack squad of 8 year olds, the fundamentals, mechanics, techniques and rituals transcend over.

The Dallas Cowboys are America's team, but baseball is the All-American game, bar none.

Ham operators' gathering planned at Wompatuck

South Shore amateur radio operators will participate in an event June 22 and 23 at Wompatuck State Park, Hingham. Field radio communication stations will be set up to contact other hams throughout the U.S. and Canada over a 24-hour period. The objective is to see who can make the highest number of contacts.

The event is the annual "shakedown run" for the American Radio Relay League's national Field Day, which is a competition as well as a trial run for emergency communication skills used during disaster situations.

The League estimates that more than 35,000 hams participate every year.

The Wompatuck setup begins at 2 p.m. Saturday, June 22. All are invited to visit the working amateur radio station and learn about the role ham radio plays on the South Shore. Visitors are welcome before 4 p.m. in the afternoon or after 8 a.m. Sunday morning. Signs will be posted.

Capeway Radio Club members from Braintree, Duxbury, Hanover, Holbrook, Norwell, Quincy, Scituate, Sudbury and Weymouth will be joined by other area amateur radio operators, who are licensed by the Federal Communications Commission.

School site finds common ground

Boards pledge to work together

By DOREEN LEGGETT

Past issues and future plans were hashed out at a school facilities committee meeting Tuesday, during which the concerns of the Design Review Board were addressed and questions from the community solicited.

The three-hour meeting, which took place in the high school's audio/visual studio, was attended by abutters of the proposed $9.9 million school, representatives from several town boards and concerned taxpayers.

The facilities committee (also called the school building committee) will work with other boards in town to plan the best pre- kindergarten-to-third grade school given the site constraints.

The Design Review Board (DRB) wrote a letter to the facilities committee over two weeks ago spelling out the concerns they had, including ones with the site, budget and lack of a project manager.

The DRB had requested the 23 original sites, as well as the Osgood School be revisited.

After a presentation by school Supt. Stephen Hart, which included the documentary on the inadequacies of Osgood School, several members of the review board expressed reservations, but also support.

The Citizens Mitigation Committee for the restoration of the Old Colony Railroad's Greenbush line held the first of two scheduled public hearings last week.

Approximately 18 residents attended this first session, and concerns were expressed on topics including child safety, station location, noise and pollution, business concerns and wetlands issues.

Formed by Cohasset selectmen, in conjunction with the town mitigation committee, the seven-member board is soliciting comments and concerns from local residents and then passing this information, back through the selectmen, to the town committee.

Chairman Peter Pearce opened the hearing by saying the purpose of the com

Residents will find something extra inside their real estate tax bills being mailed this week.

The town's newly formed Open Space Committee has compiled a survey which is the first step in preparing an open space and recreational plan for Cohasset.

The committee asks that residents fill out the questionnaire and return it to town hall by July 22.

Town meeting recently authorized spending $12,000 for obtaining professional services to assist in the preparation of an open space plan which will set the stage for the town to apply for state money to buy property, such as the 20 acres of Turkey Hill in Cohasset near the Hingham line.

Turkey Hill will be used for conserva-

Train forum attracts a handful of residents

mittee was to help citizens lessen the impact of the rail line returning to Cohasset.

One business owner, Mandy Burgoon of Carousel Antiques, expressed the concern of increased parking by daily commuters in an already congested Cohasset center and how a lack of parking would affect the town's small business owners.

Saying she has counted up to 60 cars on an average business day parked between Smith Place and the Red Lion Inn, Burgoon feared the loss of these parking spaces once the train started operating.

"I have no idea where my customers are going to go," she said. "They're literally parking on the (old) railroad tracks now."

Pearce told Burgoon that any disruption would be minimal, as the Cohasset stop was not to be in the center of town. Instead, the station will be located in North Cohasset, off of Route 3A, at the site of the old Cohasset Winter Gardens ice skating rink and former boat storage facility.

Many in attendance were surprised to learn that the train would not be stopping in the town center.

Another business owner said locating the station stop out on Route 3A was a mistake, and that a Cohasset center stop should be added and would serve a two-fold purpose.

First, it would control and slow train speed as it passed through the center of town (top speed at the train's fastest point will be 60 miles per hour); and secondly, businesses would profit from a mid-town station stop. The idea, he said, of losing additional daily business from Cohasset and Scituate commuters to stores along Route 3A would be devastating to town center stores.

"If it's (the train) gonna come, for business owners it's better to have a stop downtown instead of further up Route 3A," Burgoon added.

All agreed that the lack of suitable parking in the town center (the Route 3A site will provide parking for 300 vehicles) all but excludes a stop in this area.

Pearce offered the idea of using the Osgood School location, which could be adapted for parking, as an alternative to the downtown site.

Saying the train would require a straight 800-foot-long high level platform (Cohasset center does not fit this requirement), he told business owners if a stop was located at the school site, this might satisfy both speed and dollar worries.

Concern was expressed over the 11 train grade crossings to be located throughout Cohasset. One resident questioned whether emergency vehicles would be blocked from side streets when the crossing barriers were down.

Pearce stated he was told by Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority officials that the longest the barriers would be down was 60 seconds.

Other concerns in this area focused on whether the town or state would be responsible for repairs of the equipment, where the funds for such repairs would come from and how quickly repairs would be undertaken and accomplished.

School bus safety at the grade crossings was discussed, as were extra precautions which would be required for children during the morning and afternoon school hours. As with some of the other points, this area developed into a discussion of financial ramifications, i.e., possible added taxes, for residents.

Responding to a question about noise, Pearce said it might be possible to eliminate some whistles and horns at certain crossings, but not from all crossings.

On the subject of wetlands, Pearce said the MBTA had informed him that less than 5,000 feet of wetlands would be affected by rail construction.

When one resident asked whether wooden or concrete track ties would be used, as creosote-treated wooden ties could have a potentially harmful effect on wetland areas, Pearce was unable to state for certain which ties would be used in the rail construction.

Beechwood Street resident Peter Robb suggested the board members take a field trip to the Whitman/Abington, Route 123, area and view for themselves rail construction presently underway.

Robb said the 15-foot-high noise barriers along the roadway have already been festooned with graffiti and coupled with the overall ugliness of the construction area, was not endearing the Old Colony Railroad's Plymouth line to its new neighbors, and this, he predicted, was what was coming to Cohasset.

The committee will hold its second and final public hearing towards the end of July, though the exact date has yet to be determined. Pearce said he expected more residents will want to attend this last session.

Open space survey mailed

tion purposes and will be managed by the Trustees of Reservations, which has an agreement with the landowners, the Sapanaro family, for the purchase of the site. The conservation commissions of Hingham and Cohasset have agreed to submit an application for state grant funding to support 54 percent of the acquisition costs. The Trustees of Reservations, a private conservation group, owns World's End in Hingham and the Thayer and Whitney Woods reservation in Hingham and Cohasset.

Officials say if a recreational plan had been in place at the time, the town could have applied for state grants to offset the price of purchasing the Hagerty and Lily Pond properties.

The survey asks for residents' input about open space, environmental, and recreation uses in Cohasset.

"The purpose of the plan is to inventory and assess current open space and recreation resources, to articulate community needs, goals, and objectives, and to prepare a five-year action plan," the survey states.

A public meeting on the open space plan is set for 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, July 9 at town hall.

Coyote sightings on upswing

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Police and animal control officers in Hingham, Cohasset, and Scituate said coyotes have been seen in various locations their communities, and are urging residents to take steps to minimize contact with them.

Dr. Greg Mertz, director of the New England Wildlife Center in Hingham, estimates that the coyote population in Hingham could be as high as 30 animals.

He recommends that residents secure garbage cans, preferably in a closed garage or shed, and do not leave pet food outside.

In Cohasset, several residents have reported seeing coyotes in their yards, and a police cruiser recently struck a coyote as it darted across Route 3A one night, according to Chief Brian Noonan. The animal was found dead the next day; the cruiser was not damaged.

Noonan also believes coyotes may be responsible for the appearance of deer in parts of town where none have been reported for years. Police have received calls of deer sightings on Nichols Road and Government Island. The coyotes may be chasing the deer away from wooded areas, he said.

Hingham Animal Control Officer Albert Currie said he has received several reports of coyotes in the vicinity of Fort Hill Street and at the end of South Pleasant Street. Both streets are near wooded areas—Bare Cove Park and Wompatuck State Park, respectively.

In the case of the Fort Hill Street area, construction of new houses at Conservatory Park and at Sherman Way has destroyed the animals' habitat, forcing them into closer contact with humans, Currie said.

Scituate's Animal Control Officer Kim Gilsdorf said last week coyotes have been seen "all over town." There have been 20 to 30 reports of missing housecats in Scituate, but Gilsdorf said that is typical and is not necessarily an indication that coyotes are to blame.

"We always have 20 cats missing, but often they're found locked in a tool shed, or someone has taken them in, and a lot are hit by cars," she said.

Last year, in Marshfield, a rash of coyote sightings coincided with reports of the disappearance of 70 housecats between July and September. Norma Haskins, the animal control officer in that town, concluded that a roving pack of coyotes was responsible.

But Mertz said coyotes do not travel in packs. While they may resemble wolves, which do form communal groups, coyotes will travel in a family unit of mother with offspring, which she is teaching to hunt. Until the young animals are old enough to accompany their mothers, lone coyotes will search for food.

Mertz said coyotes are "highly opportunistic" and will eat whatever they can find. Coyotes will usually eat rabbits, mice, and rats. A coyote that was struck by a car in Boston two years ago was examined at the wildlife center here. He said an examination of the animal's stomach contents showed it had been eating apples.

"That speaks volumes [about the opportunistic nature of coyotes]," Mertz said, adding that the animals are "very clever."

The animals can carry rabies, and if infected, will demonstrate signs of disorientation or unusual behavior, just as raccoons do. However, the likelihood that a coyote is rabid is quite remote, he said.

If a resident observes a coyote in or near a yard, he recommends that the residents should "just go in the house." The animal will soon wander away.

He also questions whether the coyotes are chasing deer from the woods. The deer population has increased in recent years, due to the lack of predators—both animal and human.

The New England Wildlife Center is participating in a state program to reduce the deer population by injecting the females with contraceptives, Mertz said. This program will eliminate the need for periodic hunting to combat over-population. Humane organizations have opposed deer hunts, and hunting deer in urban and suburban locations can pose a danger to people living nearby.

The right idea at the right time ...for 50 years

My father used to say: "It wasn't so much that I invested with Fidelity back then. It was that I stayed with Fidelity."

A generation ago, my father had the right idea–to invest with a young Boston company that gave him the opportunities he needed to make the most of his money. Today, I have the chance to build on what he started.

In 50 years, Fidelity Investments® has grown from a single mutual fund to a world leader in financial services. But there's a lot my father would still recognize about Fidelity. Like their investment expertise. And the way they've continually offered new ways to manage money. Discount brokerage services. Workplace retirement plans. Even investment services provided through other financial institutions.

Over the years, Fidelity worked for my father. Now it's time to put Fidelity to work for me and my kids.

Lots of academic and athletic honors noted this week

On Sunday, May 26, Heidi M. Lincoln received a bachelor of science degree from Framingham State College. She also earned dean's list honors for the spring semester. Heidi's concentration is apparel merchandising, and she has been hired by T.J.X. Corporation as an allocation analyst at their corporate headquarters in Framingham.

Heidi is the daughter of Larry and Linda Lincoln, and our hats go off to her — she had a grand college career, and we're sure she will do the same in the business world!

And, did you hear about Nicole Barry? Kudos go out to her. She earned herself a master's degree from Boston College in developmental and educational psychology! Wow! Nicole is the daughter of Paul and Edna Barry.

On May 6 at Brockton High School during the Special Olympics Competition for the Southern Massachusetts area, Matt Kardok received the Elmer P. Ladouceur Competition Scholarship Award. This scholarship was awarded to help further his athletic skills at the Massachusetts State Special Olympic Games. Matt represented Massachusetts at the World Games last summer in New Haven, Conn. He is the son of Barbara and Charles Kardok, Hoover Road. Best of luck, Matt, for many future wins.

Congrats to Scott Hadayai, son of Richard and Sheila Hadayai, an 11th-grader at St. Thomas More School, Gardner Lake, Oakdale, Conn., who achieved the distinction of honors for the recently completed third marking term.

New Colby College grad, Laurie Bronstein, daughter of Barry and Judith Bronstein, is awarded her diploma at the college commencement.

Ellory Clark makes the news again. More of his Olympic prowess has surfaced. The Mass. Senior Games took place last week in Springfield, and he went away with eight medals! He earned himself golds in the shot, four-pound hammer throw, javelin and the 400-meter run, the discus and 800-meter run. Mr. Clark earned silver medals in the 200-meter run and the long jump! Before he took part in all of this, he went to Hopkinton to be part of the carrying of the Olympic Torch — he was the one who shouted "Go!" at the ceremony! Plus, it was a steamy hot day! An inspiration to all of us, wouldn't you say?

We congratulate Lilian Vaughan, who recently graduated from Buckingham Browne and Nichols School in Cambridge. Lilian was inducted into the Cum Laude Society as a result of her strong grade point average.

A Cohasset resident was named by the head of the school, Richard Melvoin, to the honor roll for the second semester at Belmont Hill School. Ian L. Simons, son of Robert L. and Judith F. Simons of Cohasset, earned honors.

If you see Brendan Mulcahy walking around town with a bigger-than-ever grin, here is the reason why — Brendan won two medals at the Special Olympics this past Sunday! He won a gold for the softball throw, and a bronze medal for his part in the 50-yard dash! He has every reason to be very proud of himself. We sure are proud of him!

If it seems that the town is a little quieter this week, Appalachia Service Project volunteers left last Saturday to do their marvelous good deeds. We hope to hear all about it upon their return, and wish them good luck and Godspeed on their journey.

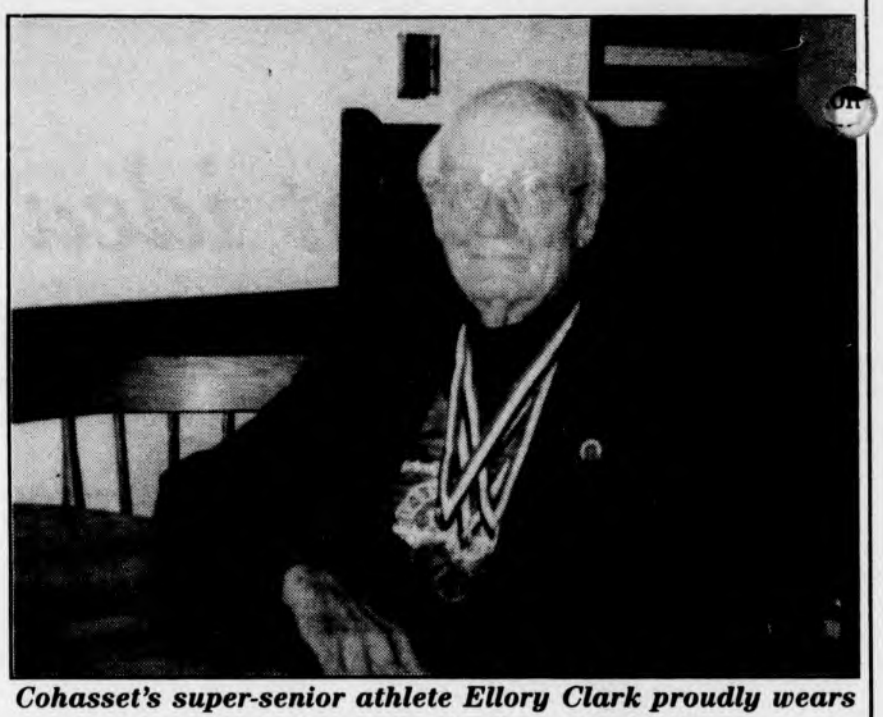
Julienne R. Quemere, daughter of Kathleen Quemere of Cohasset and Larry Quemere of Boston, has been given the Pi Kappa Lambda National Music Society Award at Hartwick College. Quemere received the awards during the college's annual Honors Day Convocation.



Cohasset's super-senior athlete Ellory Clark proudly wears some of the medals he won in the Mass. Senior Games.

Great work, Julienne.

Boston University awarded academic degrees to 4,376 students this spring. Among the graduates was Cohasset resident Robert Paton, who received an MLA in interdisciplinary studies. Hats off to you, Robert!

Laurie B. Bronstein of Cohasset was one of 450 seniors who received bachelor of arts degrees at Colby College in Waterville, Maine, May 26. Laurie, the daughter of Barry and Judith Bronstein of Cohasset, majored in sociology. Laurie's honors included magna cum laude, dean's list and distinction in her major.

News has arrived from Keene, N.H. Patricia A. Tolini was awarded a BA degree at Keene State College's commencement ceremony May 11.

Congrats go to you, Patty!

Babson College, located in Wellesley, announces that Michael S. Burns qualified for the spring semester dean's list, which recognizes outstanding student scholarship. Michael is the son of Dr. and Mrs. John M. Burns, Jerusalem Road.

Finally for this week comes news from Roger Williams University, located in Bristol, Rhode Island. Among the more than 650 candidates for undergraduate degrees at commencement exercises was Alyssa R. Giagrando, who earned a bachelor of arts degree from the College of Arts and Sciences.

That's the news from here — now that summer is officially here, there will be tons of news for you to report to me. Please don't forget to do it!

EDITORIAL

A Lack of Civility

'All I want of you is a little seevility, and that of the commonest god-damnedest kind.'

— Anonymous, The New Bedford Classic, 1918.

From as far away as the sidewalk in front of the building, people running late to a recent meeting in the town hall auditorium could hear a resident yelling at the top of his voice at a board member.

Last week, other citizens watched and listened as another resident made an insulting remark to a committee member at a different meeting.

These are just two incidents in a disturbing trend in Cohasset that has its roots in the water crisis of three years ago when finger-pointing took a nasty turn.

Hey, it's a free country. You have the right to object to the proposed new school, sewer financing plans, lousy water pressure or soaring water rates. You don't have to like any of it and you can get pretty darn mad if you want to.

But the line should be drawn at the effrontery shown by a few toward those who sit on the various elected and appointed committees in town.

At times, we're all guilty of being impatient, demanding, pushy and rude. Our lives are so hurried that the addition of just one more stress can tip the scales and make us berate slow drivers, fellow shoppers, co-workers and even family members and friends.

There's no question that our public personality in this country has become negative and often ugly. Anyone who doesn't exceed the speed limit knows that by looking in the rear view mirror at a fellow motorist bearing down on the car's rear bumper with scary ferocity.

The time has come to exercise more self-control in our lives toward our fellow man whether a friend, stranger or a government official.

Don't misunderstand — here, in the newspaper business, we enjoy a healthy adversarial role with government and wouldn't have it any other way.

But personal attacks and yelling is not the way to get a point across. That behavior is embarrassing to everyone and degrading to the person or persons sitting on the town board.

Our committee members have names and faces. They are your neighbors who all live in this town, too. When your taxes go up, so do theirs. In many cases, they have spent endless hours in meetings and behind the scenes working toward a solution while at the same time holding down a full-time job, managing a family or trying to enjoy retirement. They often got involved because they can offer some talent or expertise to the task at hand or want to give something back to a town they call home.

Most don't expect to be thanked but should be able to expect to be treated with respect even by those who disagree.

By all means, ask the aggressive questions. If you don't like the way the town is run, then get involved. We take our hats off to those who challenge government and follow through with concrete, constructive action.

So get your soap box out and object to whatever you want to, but bury the hatchet, please.

Rushing of school plans decried

LETTERS

To the Editor:

The townspeople voted for a new elementary school at the override election. The election was found to be illegal due to poor planning on the part of the Selectmen in their rush to have a quick election they failed to post the election according to the law. Next the Selectmen had to go before the state legislature and have them vote to pass a law that made the illegal election legal so that the school would be able to be bonded.

Then comes the School Facilities Committee with the School Committee and the Superintendent of Schools, again in a rush to meet a filing deadline of June 3. They put together a package for submission to the State. They meet the deadline but, they have not had the package reviewed by any competent town authority on behalf of and to protect the interests of the town of Cohasset. This is only the largest capital expenditure to-date in the history of the town. The Design Review Committee is asked on May 1 to review the project by the School Facilities Committee. They present the committee with a list of questions May 6 and ask that they receive answers so that they can comply with the by-laws. The School Facilities Committee does not take up their questions so the Design Review Committee sends a letter, dated June 12, to the School Facilities Committee and copies to the Board of Selectmen, Advisory Board, Planning Board, Conservation Commission, Sewer Commission and School Committee. A joint meeting was held Wednesday evening, June 19, at the Deer Hill School with the School Facilities Committee and the Design Review Board. At that meeting Supt. Hart attempted to chastise the Design Review Committee for not adhering to the time frame of the town by-laws because they had not responded to the School Facilities Committee in 21 days. The Design Review Committee stated that they had not had enough information to effectively respond in 21 days. The School Facilities Committee had rushed this issue through the Capital Budget Committee before Town Meeting with little concrete information and a Town Meeting without plans but, Design Review was not willing to follow the same rushed program. Another joint meeting with the School Facilities Committee and Design Review will take place Tuesday evening, June 25. The School Facilities promised to answer all of the Design Review's questions and concerns at this meeting. In a show of arrogance, the School Facilities Committee stated that they would not accept questions from the public at the meeting last Wednesday. However, a citizen stated to the chairman of the School Facilities Committee that he just wanted to be sure that he understood the chair, that the citizens and taxpayers of the town were not allowed to speak on the record at this meeting. The chairman relented and allowed the public to ask questions.

Thursday evening the new school project came before the Conservation Commissionwhich stated that it had to go through a legal process that would involve public meetings and detailed review of the plans, reports, impact on the wetlands, effects on the animals living in the area, etc. They stated that this would take time, it could not be rushed. Their next meeting will be held July 18.

Why are we being rushed? We are told that this project was conceived about three and a half years ago, according to the Superintendent of Schools. Why, if this is such an important project, weren't the Design Review Committee, Planning Board, Conservation Commission and the Capital Budget Committee brought into the planning of this project? The School Facilities Committee may not have been legally obligated to ask for these committees, commissions and boards to assist but, we are a town and this is the largest dollar project in the town's history. Why have the School Facilities Committee, School Committee and the Superintendent not asked for the help of all of these boards, commissions and committees throughout the entire process?

Board surprised at letter being published

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Design Review Board was surprised to see that our letter to the School Facilities Committee and several other town boards was printed under your "Letters to the Editor" heading in last week's Mariner. The Design Review Board did not collectively or individually submit this letter to any publication or circulate it publicly. It was sent only to the boards listed. We do not question your right to publish this letter after it became a matter of public record. We do take exception, however, to the implication that the Mariner received this letter directly from our board. We would appreciate your setting the record straight in your next publication.

Concerns aired in school site walk-through

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

A June 19 walk through the proposed new school site behind the Deer Hill School did not alleviate some concerns of abutters

And schools Supt. Stephen Hart objected to the Design Review Board request to reopen the entire school siting issue.

The meeting was scheduled by the school facilities committee, a volunteer town group overseeing the project, to address the citizens' site concerns, as well as those of the Design Review Board.

The new $9.9 million elementary school has already been shifted 20 feet to increase the distance from the neighbors on Old Pasture Road.

Abutters, some of who make no secret of their support of the school, say it is still too close.

"We had no idea that it is right in our backyard," said Jane O'Brien, 78 Old Pasture Road. "Right now we look out a beautiful wooded area. We just feel the school doesn't have enough room. "

Architect Sid Bowen assured the dozen or so townspeople assembled that the school would be 90 or 100 feet back from the property lines.

He added that there would be 30 feet of new and old trees that would conceal everything but the smokestack from view.

Some townspeople also said they were worried that the children's play areas would not be large enough.

The Design Review Board drafted a letter two weeks ago that echoed the concerns of abutters and addressed several other issues.

"We feel the site is deficient in so many areas. We are really surprised this is the best site in Cohasset," said Gordon Hislop, who chairs the review board, during the second half of the meeting which was held inside the Deer Hill School.

He added that the his board didn't have enough time to review the plans before they were submitted to the state.

Stating that the review board was not completely writing off the site, Hislop suggested "treading water" in the process until the 23 original sites and the renovation of the Osgood School could be revisited.

Schools Supt. Stephen Hart disagreed.

He said that the 23 sites already looked at by the school facilities committee would cost additional money to buy, whereas the proposed land is owned by the town and was bought for the purpose of a new school.

As for the Osgood school, he said, it was ineligible for any state monies if renovated because it was such a poor site. Even if the school was demolished and rebuilt it would still be ineligible.

The proposed school is eligible for a 60 percent reimbursement figure by the state.

Hislop said that the June 3 deadline for state funding may have been an excuse for the architects to push the project through.

Hart said that if that deadline was not met Cohasset would have been pushed further back on the list, which could have meant an additional five-year wait for funding.

"I hope we don't lose sight of the fact that we are talking about a tremendous need for an educational facility," said Hart. "The need is so dramatic. I don't know where the children are going to go. It is not what we deserve in this town."

Architects Bowen and David Soleau also disagreed with Hislop, stating that it was a state-imposed deadline, not their own.

Soleau said that he didn't know what effect stopping the project and actively looking for other sites would have on Cohasset's placement on the list.

"This is a new one for us after 33 years of building schools," he said. "I would guess it would kick us off the list."

According to their letter, members of the Design Review Board feel that the size of the school, which is limited by wetlands, is below state guidelines, that the outside playing fields are minimal, that access by emergency vehicles is limited, and that the wooded area is claustrophobic.

The letter also questions if awarding the design contract to the architectural firm which prepared the existing conditions report was a "conflict of interest."

Board members also requested that a project manager, not a clerk of the works, be hired to oversee the project, as well as, make sure the school does not come in over budget.

School Facilities Chairman Bob Beggan said that his committee was taking the Design Review Board letter very seriously, but seeing many of the members hadn't had a chance to discuss the letter, the committee would answer questions and object to certain statements at a special meeting on Tuesday, June 25, at 7 p.m. in the high school.

"The letter was sent in the spirit of cooperation," said Hislop."We want to work with you. We don't want to be adversarial."

Boards pledge to work together

boards," said DRB Member Max Pounder. "Review with us tonight the options of what we can do in terms of supporting your review process. We do want to support the process and contribute in any way we can."

Others were not as supportive. DRB Chair Gordon Hislop said all the sites should be reexamined to make sure this was the best one.

Some community members agreed with Hislop and, echoing the earlier DRB letter, said the project was "steamrolled" through.

Adrienne McCarthy, who has attended a number of school facilities and school committee meetings, disagreed.

"(The community) has not been misguided," said McCarthy, who has three young children. "And if it has been steamrolled it has been the slowest steamroll ever."

Hislop added that a project manager, not a clerk of the works, was important in a project of this size.

Members of the school facilities committee said they would look into hiring a project manager.

The issue may be discussed at the selectmen's meeting on Monday. Representatives from the board of selectmen were at the meeting and said they would help in the process.

A project manager, which is actually a team of experts, may cost from 3 to 6 percent of the total project cost.

If the new school is combined with other projects in town, such as the sewer project, the project manager would oversee all the projects.

Members of the school facilities committee met last weekend to move the 300-foot-long school further into the town-regulated buffer zone.

There are preliminary plans to move the school another 80 feet (it is now approximately 100) from the abutters on Old Pasture Road. Abutters have expressed concerns about the close proximity of the school to their homes.

"We've said along we would do everything we could to move the building," said School Facilities Chairman Bob Beggan.

Architects and school officials added it was not as simple as just picking up the school and plunking it down in a new spot. There were other issues, such as grading, to consider.

Architect David Soleau said that the expense may, or may not increase, depending on how much additional engineering was involved.

Jill O'Donnell, an abutter on Old Pasture Road, said that she hoped the committee and architects put the concerns of townspeople before grading and financial considerations.

Other abutters expressed frustration at what they considered a misleading portrayal of the site.

Dick O'Brien, also an abutter, said that he would have spoken out before town meeting if he knew the school was so close to his property line. He envisioned the school closer to Evergreen Road.

Beggan, who also lives on Old Pasture Road, explained the present site was displayed at the second town meeting, but he thought it was 200 feet away from the homes.

When he walked the site it was about 100-feet from the property lines.

O'Brien suggested that the present situation may have been avoidable.

"It is frustrating. I think regrettably that some of the other committees weren't involved and that you probably could have used their expertise," O'Brien said.

Elaine Breslow, 90 Old Pasture Road, agreed.

Now the boards can work together to get a "an optimal project in a sub-optimal space, " she said.

If the site is shifted it may also provide for additional play areas.

Lee Jenkins questioned whether or not the playing fields would cost additional monies.

The facilities committee responded that playing fields were included in the price tag, and were separate from those at the Deer Hill.

Facilities Committee Member Rob Spofford earlier mentioned that the cost of the project can not be increased without going back to the town.

Hart added that if the building couldn't be built at the cost previously decided upon, it is in the architectural contract that the firm has to bear the sole expense of redesigning.

He added that an independent study found that it wasn't a conflict of interest when the town hired the firm Earl R. Flansburgh + Associates to undertake both the design contact and the existing conditions report.

In fact, the independent firm recommended it.

Conservation Commission Jeff Waal, who stated that members of his board would work with the school facilities committee, said that the committee should look at variety of options and bring them to their hearing with the commission (which may be postponed from July 18.)

"Dialogues, as frustrating as these are, (constitute) progress," said Joseph McElroy, who wanted to know why the Deer Hill School couldn't be expanded to a kindergarten through grade six school.

Roy Fitzsimmons, a Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers member, said that the group is circulating a petition to establish a date to rescind the town meeting vote in favor of the new school. The petition requires 200 signatures.

ConCom to work with school plans on wetlands issues

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

Conservation Commission members expressed a willingness to look at both interests of townspeople and those of the environment when it comes to the site for the new school.

The engineers' placement of the school was designed to avoid as much contact with buffer zones and wetlands as possible.

At the June 20 meeting, commission member Jeff Waal said he isn't averse to moving the 300-foot school further into the buffer zone and further away from neighbors.

Neighbors on Old Pasture Road have expressed concern that the school, which is 100-feet away from lot lines, is too close to their property .

Commission member Jim Dedes echoed Waal's sentiments and added that the engineers could also look into filling the wetlands themselves.

"I don't want you to feel like you have to stay away from all wetlands at all costs. (Wetlands) can be replicated.," said Dedes.

The buffer zone is not under state jurisdiction and the commission can approve work done in that zone.

If the school is moved into the wetland and more than 5,000 square feet will be affected the project will fall under state and federal regulations.

Federal approval might be long in coming, said school engineers Sandy Brock and Gary Pease.

The town wetlands bylaw allows up to 2,500 square feet of wetlands to be filled without a waiver. However, those wetlands have to be replicated elsewhere.

There are two wetland systems on the 77-acre parcel: one towards Lily Pond one towards Sohier Street.

Max Pounder of the Design Review Board, which has opposed the site, suggested that a working meeting be scheduled where the architects and commission members work with overlays.

Overlays showing the school, parking lot, and driveway in various positions would be less expensive than full plans and provide a base to work off of, he said.

Chairman Thomas Callahan suggested that the school department submit additional plans, along with those already submitted, if they wanted larger, or more, playing fields.

Callahan was impressed with the architects' attention to local bylaws.

"Given where it is, this is as sensitive to the environment as it can be," he said.

Some parts of project, including grading and the 100-foot parking lot, are already impacting the buffer zone.

The engineers are planning to fill 700 square feet of wetlands for the driveway, but are replicating 1,110 square feet of wetlands.

The sewer line, which runs to Smith Place, will have minimal impact on wetlands after excavation.

Callahan said that there may be a vernal pool on the property which the engineers should be sensitive too.

To give townspeople a clearer understanding of where the corners of the school, driveway, parking lot, detention ponds, and sewer line lay, the engineers were asked to flag and color-code the markers.

The commission also requested a wildlife and habitat survey.

The next hearing is scheduled for July 18 from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the high school.

Elaine Breslow, an Old Pasture Road resident and a school proponent, said that this was the biggest project in town history and other town boards should help out the school facilities committee.

Cohasset's Amber Hopeman heads to Annapolis

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

When most freshman head off to college, they'll stuff the family car, or more likely a borrowed van, with everything from stereos and skis, to mini-refrigerators and microwaves.

And they'll bring tons of clothes, posters, stuffed animals, sheets, and their high school yearbook in case they get lonely.

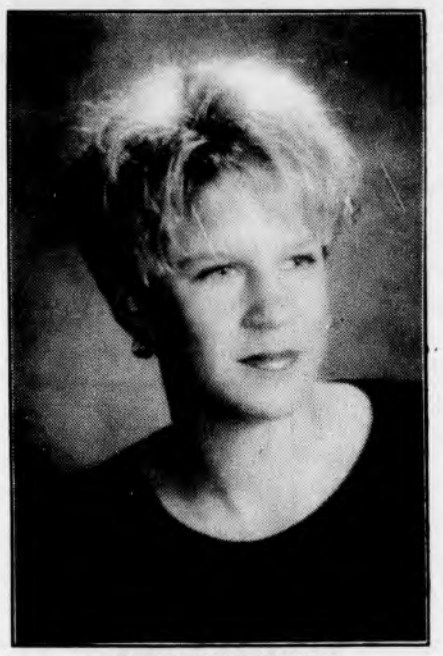
But unlike the average freshman, recent Cohasset High graduate Amber Hopeman will have an easy time packing.

When she reports to college, or the United States Naval Academy to be precise, she'll wear a skirt and blouse and bring her cleats and shin guards for soccer (she was recruited for the team). That is it.

She'll be provided with virtually everything she needs, including a closet full of summer whites, formal blues and camouflage.

As for decorations, she'll have a computer, a bed, some drawers and a desk.

Hopeman is leaving for school on July 2 to attend the Navy's idea of orientation, which is similar to basic training.



AMBER HOPEMAN

"We learn how to salute, who to salute — the proper military ways," Hopeman said with a smile.

Of course, it is not that easy.

On first day she will be thrown into a grueling physical routine, which will last six weeks.

She'll have to run a mile and a half in under 10 minutes and do 80 push-ups and 100 sit ups in under two minutes.

Hopeman is in shape from soccer, actually she is playing in tournaments up until she leaves, but the push-ups are giving her a bit of trouble, she says.

When the six weeks are up things don't get any easier. The physical regime will be joined by academics.

Although it may seem strange to some, she is looking forward to it.

"I'm really excited about going, I just kind of want to get there," said Hopeman, who will be one of under 230 women in a class of 1,200.

Hopeman, who moved from Kansas last September with her mother, Jennifer, and father, Greg, says her family and friends have been very supportive of her decision.

They haven't been envious, though.

One of her best friends from Kansas called to say that, "I'm really proud of you, but I wouldn't want to be in your position, " Hopeman recalled.

She hadn't always planned on going to the Academy. In fact, she hadn't given it much thought until the soccer coach called.

Even after that she just put the offer in the back of her mind. Then she went to visit the school.

"I fell in love with the campus," she said. " Annapolis is just gorgeous."

At least for the first year, her "plebe" year, Hopeman won't be seeing a lot of the city.

Freshmen aren't allowed to leave the campus often, and are kept very, very busy, she says.

If their grades and skills aren't acceptable they may not even be allowed to have a spring break.

There are certain traditions she'll have to get used to as well.

The upperclassmen are tough on the freshmen, said Hopeman.

When she visited the school some upperclassman were making freshmen recite everything on the menu for the next three days.

"It is just discipline and it is all a game really," she says matter-of-factly.

She'll laugh about the harsh treatment, after the upperclassman are gone, she said.

Freshman also have to run, or "chop", everywhere they go. When they run into their room they have to yell, "Go Navy!"

When asked if she was a particularly loud person, Hopeman replied.

"I can be if a have to be."

The 4,000 midshipman all eat together, but the freshman have to wait until everyone else has started eating before they can get their food.

The mental and physical hardships cause over 10 percent of the freshman to drop out.

"I have to keep in mind that everyone is in the same boat and everyone in there is trying to be the best they can be," Hopeman said.

To make sure she was making the right decision, Hopeman looked at several other schools, including Cornell University, Hobart, Williams, and Smith Colleges.

In the end she decided that it made a lot more sense to attend the Academy.

"The discipline, the education and the opportunities available to me (when I get out) ... all the pros really outweigh the cons," she says.

She'll graduate after four tuition-free years with a bachelor's degree, probably in economics or engineering, she says, and a naval commission.

Graduates are required to serve five years with the navy after they graduate, and are guaranteed a job and a certain salary.

Hopeman says the four years won't be all hard work.

"It is not like they don't have fun," she says. "It is just a different way of having fun. I don't feel like I'm giving up anything."

Cohasset puts water rate hike opposition in writing

Hingham, Hull want rate hike put on hold

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Following another bout of discolored water and poor pressure, town officials in Hingham and Hull filed a joint motion with the state Department of Public Utilities (DPU) last week to re-open the Massachusetts-American Water Company rate case.

Both towns hope that the more than 150 percent increase, approved late last month by the DPU, will be suspended until the water company has ironed out its recent problems and is in fact providing the clean, high-quality, treated water promised to its more than 10,500 customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset.

Cohasset town officials wrote a stern letter to the chairman of the DPU opposing the new rates, but according to Town Administrator Gregory Doyon there are no current plans to launch an appeal of the recent rate hike decision — independently or with neighboring towns.

"The town of Cohasset strongly protests the approval of a substantial rate increase to the Mass-American Water Company," said Selectman Chairman Merle Brown, in a letter to DPU Chairman John Howe.

"Our residents, who are supplied water from this system are served by ancient, undersized mains and connector pipes, and continue to experience poor water quality, discoloration, and insufficient water pressure..

"We hope that you would reverse this increase, and if not, give more weight to the above factors when considering future requests for rate increases from this company," Brown added.

Mass-American filed a 164 percent rate hike proposal with the DPU in November with much of the increase intended to cover the costs of the company's $39.5 million water treatment facility located in Hingham, which went on-line more than a month ago.

Problems at the new plant during an engineering test performed two weeks ago to bring the 7.7 million gallon per day facility up to capacity, forced the company to divert water from the plant back to the wells, leaving residents with poor pressure, discolored water and in some cases, no water at all.

Until the problem was corrected and the plant brought back up to speed, the company banned all outside watering for two days.

This glitch followed a pipe flushing program over several weeks during which residents have received brown, gritty water off and on as increased water flow and pressure dislodged years of iron and manganese build up inside 90-year old water pipes.

Town officials in Hingham and Hull argue that water company customers should not have to pay the higher rates until the plant is fully operational and quality water is actually being delivered.

But water company officials insist the plant is working and recent engineering tests have been performed without a hitch. Mass-American Vice President Keith Bossung said the facility has been treating about 3.5 million gallons per day since going on-line in April.

According to Hingham Selectmen Chairman Iris Daigle, the board met with Hull officials two weeks ago to discuss the possibility of appealing the rate hike decision and decided in light of recent water company troubles and on the recommendation of Hingham Town Counsel James Toomey, to try to re-open the case.

"When the problems developed last week we determined that the (water treatment) plant wasn't being 'used and useful.'" Daigle said.

Toomey explained that during the DPU rate case Mass-American made certain representations about the plant going into service that didn't pan out.

As a general rule, for a rate to be approved, a facility has to be "used and useful" within the test year which in this case would have been during 1995, Toomey said. Without going into service until spring of this year, Toomey argued that the new rates should not be charged until next year.

According to water company officials, the new water bills reflecting the large rate increase retroactive to June 1 are slated to go out this week.

During the recent treatment plant snafu, Daigle said she referred dozens of angry phone calls from residents to DPU officials so they are made aware of the situation.

"Mass-American is a private company and we have to depend on the DPU to be a watch dog. It's a frustrating position to be in when you don't have control over a company," Daigle said.

For now, Toomey said the ball is in the DPU's court.

When the DPU decides whether or not to re-open the rate case, Toomey said both towns will decide on taking the next step, which could be to file an appeal if the case is not re-opened.

"There are serious issues with this decision," said Toomey, who noted that if an appeal is filed it will be based on the likelihood of a positive outcome.

And despite their town's decision not to appeal, many of the 600 Mass-American customers who live in North Cohasset, are making their opposition to the rate hike and their frustration about the poor qua of their water well known to local legislators, DPU officials and even the governor.

Jerusalem Road resident Maria Plante, who has helped lead the water rate hike opposi tion in Cohasset, said she's launched a letter-writing campaign to let the DPU know that Mass-American is not delivering the clear, treated water it promised when pitching the new treatment plant.

"I can't remember when I've had a crystal clear ice cube," Plante said.

"When I put clothes in the machine...I'm not sure whether they'll come out white or black," she added.

Plante said she will work with Cohasset Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik to design a survey that will help determine the extent and the type of problems residents are having. Random water testing will be done.

Plante has also pitched a plan in town to have selectmen and the water commissioners look into tying north Cohasset residents into Cohasset's water system and breaking away from Mass-American altogether.

"I'm not giving up," said Plante, who is determined whatever the rate increase for water might be, that she gets her money's worth.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

OVERESTIMATING FLAWS

QUESTION: I found a house for sale. The price is low because it has been obviously neglected. Should I look elsewhere?

ANSWER: Not yet. You may have a diamond in the rough. Many prospects are instantly turned off by a home with peeling paint, a lawn overgrown with weeds; dirty kitchen, worn carpeting or shabby wallpaper.

Overestimating these flaws may be a mistake. You may be passing up an excellent purchase. If the location is good and other properties in the neighborhood are valued at a higher amount, it may be worth taking a longer look. Many clean-up, fix-up and paint-up jobs can be done at little cost.

Serene teachings

Loupos' martial arts philosophy is beneficial for all ages

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

John Loupos never had any intention of taking Kung Fu or Tai Chi lessons to eventually use his knowledge in a violent way.

Loupos, the owner and teacher at the Jade Forest studio in Cohasset, was drawn to the mystery of the ancient art form and its "promise of inner peace."

This is the 30th anniversary of Loupos' study of martial arts training, which began when he started taking Karate lessons as a 13 year old in Plymouth. The head instructor left the school two years later and the next in charge took over for a brief period of time before entering summer training camp to became a state police officer.

Loupos was suddenly the temporary instructor of the school at the tender age of 15. A new instructor was moving into the area, but he backed out of the position at the last minute because the class schedule conflicted with his night school hours.

Loupos said the mystery surrounding the martial arts was very attractive and drew many students to classes everywhere.

"Back in those days there was a real mystique around martial arts," he said. "It was basically a labor of love. I was more drawn to the personal effects. I really liked what it did for me."

Loupos trained at the Shaolin Temple in China with some of the finest masters in the country including Zheng Bing Dao, Lie En Jiu and Liang Xiquan, just to name a few.

"I have been most fortunate in having studied so extensively with some of the artial arts world's finest teachers," Loupos said. "I wish to extend here my deepest gratitude to each and every teacher who has helped me to further myself along the way of my chosen path."

Martial arts teacher John Loupos watches intently as one of his students performs a move at his Jade Forest studio.

Loupos' philosophy on teaching the martial arts depends mainly on the age of the students he is dealing with. He knows it is important to "balance a blend of fun and work" when working with kids, instilling a sense of discipline at the same time. Loupos speaks with adults to try to find out what they want to accomplish with their training.

Loupos has found that people have "really fallen out of touch with themselves" and influenced by the media, television and computers. "Kung Fu helps to find oneself in a world bombarded by outside forces," he said.

Tai Chi, which Loupos also teaches, is fundamentally different from Kung Fu in that it involves slow-motion movement and concentrates more on the moment.

"Chi" is the person's life force energy. It is a non-physical energy that flows through body channels. According to Eastern philosophy, people function as integrated beings. If a person becomes sick, for example, he falls out of balance. Chi keeps the body balance and a more energetic perspective.

The second part of Tai Chi deals with the idea of being in the moment. Loupos says people today are more preoccupied with what has happened and what is going to happen. Rarely are they thinking about what is happening at that moment.

"It induces an altered state of mind/body consciousness," Loupos said. "People become more mindful of their internal processes."

Tai Chi is excellent in reducing stress, allowing a person to better set priorities.

"It's a short leap from mental to physical strength," Loupos said.

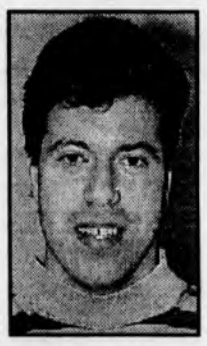
EXTRA POINTS/Joe Reardon

Enlightenment finally shines on non-golfer

Golf is one of those sports I just could never get — and had no desire to. Watching the game on television ranked just ahead of candlepin bowling and behind Martha Stewart's secret to baking the perfect bundt cake.

I make no bones about it. I never gave the gave the game a chance. To me, golf courses were ideal locations for going on cross country runs. I thought anyone golfing on a blustery 45-degree day in November had to have a screw loose anyway.

While my friends would vote for an evening of miniature golf during a summer evening, I would beg them to reconsider taking in a movie at the Cameo in South Weymouth. Unfortunately, my preference was more often than not, ignored and I was subjected to an evening of trying to putt a colored golf ball through the open mouth of — depending on the course — a dinosaur, cow, rattlesnake or a big fat guy.



Reardon

As much as I hated miniature golf, I loathed my only experience on a real, honest to goodness 18-hole course. To make matters worse, my three friends not only talked the talk in exaggerating their abilities on the links, but they also dressed as though they were modeling for a Nevada Bob's catalog. All three wore the latest brand of golf shoes with their cute little white socks. Their stiff-collared shirts were ironed and completely wrinkle-free and the shorts they wore made them the most fashion conscious group on the course.

I was the black sheep of the bunch with a pair of jams, high-top basketball sneakers and a Boston Red Sox T-shirt. And I golfed as bad as I dressed.

As much as my friends exaggerated their talents, they were all still head-and-shoulders better than me in every aspect of the game. I sliced the ball badly on my first three attempts at teeing off. Fortunately, the 50-foot screen saved the golfers on the other side from a surprising bump on the noggin.

As the game progressed, slowly, my friends became angrier at my ineptitude on the course. The patience and help they displayed on the first three holes quickly evaporated and I was left by myself nearly two holes back. I sliced balls into the woods, plunked them into water holes,

Dodgers are regular season champs

BY KEVIN LEWIS
Special to the Mariner

The Dodgers, sponsored by the Cohasset Permanent Firefighters, won the regular season title in one of the closest races in recent memory. The Dodgers battled the Pirates down to the wire and, with a sweep of the Mets in a doubleheader, coupled with the Pirates' loss to the Rangers, won the title. This year the league was dominated by 12-year-olds which resulted in a very strong league. Ten different players hit home runs. Homering for the Dodgers were Brendan Byrne, Andrew Walsh and Jeff Scribner. The Red Sox players were Tim Straughan and Peter Maitland. Greg Smith, Greg Harrington and Ben Kinch of the Pirates all hit taters. Paul Previtt of the Mets and Kevin Hanian of the A's were also members of the home run club. The Dodgers team consisted of 12-year-olds Liam Martin, Yari Martin, Kyle Webber, William Prendergast, Brendan Bryne, Andrew Walsh and Jeff Schribner. Eleven-year-old members are Brian Lewis, Curt Kahn and Johnny Dwyer. The "Ninety-Nine" boys are Mark Lewis and Andrew Lovalo, who are both 9 years old.

The playoffs start this week, so for some great baseball and outstanding food from Captain Morgan's fine eating establishment, come on down to Barnes Field.

Rockets look back at fun season

By IRENE VOLPE BERRY AND MARY EARON
Special to the Mariner

Too often in amateur sports that involve children, there is a heavy inluence on winning the game, no matter what, instead of teaching the game to those new to it, stressing sportsmanship and team spirit in the process. When the latter attitude is the emphasis of the coaching, the sport becomes enjoyable and something to look forward to, not only to the kids, but to the coaches and attending parents.

The 1996 softball season for the Rockets has been an exemplary example of this ideology. They even brought in a few wins, which was icing on the cake. Thanks to the coaching efforts of Bill Earon, Sue Rizzotti, Steve Pinkus and Rick Daniels, with Irene Volpe Barry as scorekeeper, the Rockets put forth an admirable season for sponsor, Fowler House Restaurant.

The returning fourth-grade ballplayers helped their third-grade teammates become adept at throwing, catching and hitting. The team's enthusiasm greatly outweighed any lack of experience on the field and lent an attitude of fun at the same time. Each player learned and played each position during the games. Skills and self-confidence improved steadily through the season.

Ali Earon and Lauren Rizzotti tagged runs as team catcher and great plays on the infield, respectively. Marisa Mello and Kristen James were ready and able pitchers. Amyra Chase, Danielle Pinkus and Zoe Murray hit homers and brought teammates around. Delia Rega, Allison Dean, Samantha Sargent, Christina Daniels, Jennifer Fiore and Alex Coffey fielded with enthusiasm and style. Every player was instrumental in holding runs and making plays to the right base.

Nice job Rockets. Remember to practice before next season and to keep up your fine work. See you at tryouts in '97!

Loupos' martial arts philosophy is beneficial for all ages

"It helps relax the body and release the stress."

With Tai Chi training, people become more in tune with their bodies and there is an inner-structure focus which emerges. Students learn how to exploit their bones, ligaments and tissues as an alternative power source. The training uses a vast array of muscles in the body and improves the student's posture as well.

"Tai Chi is teaching the body a different language than the language it's accustomed to," Loupos said.

Some people interested in taking martial arts lessons want to use what they have learned through violence. Loupos believes it is through the teacher's own philosophy of the martial arts which ultimately helps the student decide whether or not to try a different studio.

"A teacher will attract students with the quality of his or her energy," he said. "I'll talk with someone on the phone. If they're the aggressive type, by the end of the call the person may not be attracted to that teaching.

"The Kung Fu we teach here prepares people for self defense."

Kung Fu has proven to be an excellent discipline for abused spouses. Loupos explained it makes people more comfortable and confident with themselves and less vulnerable to others. Teaching kids that structure helps them to avoid falling victim to abuse.

Loupos has found that there are more and more females are getting involved in the martial arts for many different reasons. Forty percent of Loupos' students are female with a wide range of backgrounds.

In the '60's, most people wanted to learn the martial arts for self defense. Now, Loupos says, self defense is usually the second or third reason. People use the workouts as part of their exercise routines and stress reducers.

"The first thing I want to do is listen to people and find out what benefits they want to get," Loupos said.

Loupos makes sure he promotes a friendly environment in his studio. He doesn't use a belt system in his Kung Fu and Tai Chi teachings, which helps eliminate competition between students. Instead, Loupos has found the students tend to encourage each other more.

Loupos says the satisfaction he receives as a martial arts teacher is a more complicated question. Through the resources he helps people bring out in themselves, Loupos believes people can improve their lives and gain more self confidence.

"My teaching leaves me the feeling that I've really helped people," he said.

The name Jade Forest is chinese and seemed to be an appropriate name for the studio. In chinese culture, Jade is regarded as the most precious stone. Its green color denotes growth and flourishing. Loupos likens it with the cultivation of the students.

"Forests are made up of individual trees," he said. The forest represent the entire class while the trees are the individual students in the class.

The studio has been at its present location since 1984 after seven years in Scituate and two more in Humarock. Prior to that, Loupos taught the martial arts in Florida.

The studio itself includes a small library with books ranging from diet and philosophy to Kung Fu and Tai Chi. There are also several different magazines dealing with the martial arts.

One can't help but notice the altar against the studio wall. It is not used for religious purposes, but is there instead to remind students of the virtues and values he tries to instill in them through his teachings.

His students hail mainly from the South Shore, though some of the students in h private classes come from as far as the North Shore, some out of state.

And because of the different muscles and discipline involved in the martial arts, Loupos says they provide excellent cross-training workouts. Anaerobic and aerobic exercises are part of the training, not to mention the concentration required.

"Martial arts will enhance any other activity," he said. "You exercise the body in no other way another activity will exercise the body."

Loupos says several of his students are involved in sports including skiing, tennis, rock climbing, running and cycling. "They enhance performance and pleasure in their activities," he said.

Loupos has taken what he has learned from the chinese masters and applied it to more modern times, still keeping rich the philosophies of the earliest teachers.

"I'm sort of a blend of a traditional teacher," Loupos said. "I try to teach things verbatim as I learn them. I'm a a steward of these and it's my job to pass them on, intact, to the next generation."

Enlightenment shines

drove them into patches of trees and hit one golfer in the back with my best drive of the afternoon.

But it was just last weekend that my entire outlook on the game changed. I was listening to WEEI's new show "From Tee to Green" and was amazed at the knowledge the average golfer had about the game. These golfers spoke in their own special lingo and were rich for knowledge in how to improve their game.

And then it hit me like a ton of bricks. The reason I didn't like golf had nothing to do with the game itself. The simple, dark truth was that I was abysmal at it. Even a mild-mannered game of miniature golf was a lesson in humility. It was a lesson, I found, I could avoid simply by not playing. That way, I could spare my fragile ego and use my mythical "boredom factor" as an excuse for staying off the links.

I have always admired people with certain talents. I have never been able to fathom how a gymnast could do a cartwheel on a balance beam. And anyone who can draw more than stick people is a hero in my book. Skateboarders are another breed of "dare devils" who I take my hat off to. How anyone can stay on a skateboard while going down a steep hill, and living to tell about it, deserves a medal.

Golf is right there, tool. The practice, patience, concentration and skill needed to get a ball into a cup 200 yards away with only four strokes is unfathomable to me.

So here's to the die-hard golfers out there. Keep up the good work and I hope to see you on the greens some day. Just remember, be ready to duck.

The Grand Tour

Using a low-stone retaining wall at the edge of their driveway at 15 Whitney Woods Lane, Jennifer and Mark McGreenery have cleverly created a beautiful perennial raised bed filled with summertime color. Snow-in-Summer tumbles freely near the stone steps next to the curved brick path leading to the front door while the rest of the bed is filled with bright pink azalea, fuchsia and pale pink cosmos, pink dianthus and pale yellow yarrow. A stone pineapple, the WELCOME symbol, accents the garden while Miss Kim, a Korean lilac adds pale lavender color. In the side yard, a white arch beckons the visitor to enter the brick patio area, home to an L-shaped border filled with pale pink and fuchsia rhododendron and perennials featuring grey-leaved Santolina. Jennifer tells me that she and Mark have worked long and hard over the past six years to create this garden and feel that this year it has reached their expectations. Please be sure to drive by and enjoy this lovely labor of love. Congratulations Mark and Jennifer on a job well done!

Police Brief

Youth brawl at Government Island

Police made one arrest following a brouhaha at Government Island Saturday night but threaten there will be more if this behavior continues.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said about 30-50 youths from Hingham and Cohasset congregated at Government Island and were involved in an affray.

All Cohasset units, as well as units from Scituate responded, Jackson said.

Three people were treated at the scene for minor injuries.

"The situation was fluid and we tried to restore the peace," Jackson said.

Police officer William Quigley arrested Steven Leonard, 19, of 35 School St., Hingham, who was charged three counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (a knife and mace) and affray.

Police are seeking a complaint against a Cohasset youth for malicious destruction of property (smashing the windows to a van) and affray.

Jackson said six carloads of Hingham youths had come to settle a score with Cohasset about an altercation that occurred at a concert a couple of weeks ago.

"Hopefully this is the end of the matter but if not, there will be more arrests made – we guarantee it," Jackson said.

Paul Pratt Library Corner

Summer reading program begins

The summer reading program for children is now underway. Named, "Catch the Summer Spark, Read!", all summer the program will light young people's imaginations with activities focusing on related themes such as creativity, invention, the stars and energy. Participants will receive bookmarks, game sheets and reading logs. Those who join can also receive coupons for reduced admissions to more than three dozen cultural, educational and recreational attractions. The children will pledge to read either a certain number of books, or for a certain amount of time each week during the summer, and they will be rewarded by being able to choose a free paperback book when they fulfill their pledge. Call Suzanne Terry in the children's room at the library for more information.

Volunteers honored at garden reception

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Library hosted a reception at the home and magnificent garden of Barbara and Jeff Power on Beach Street last Thursday evening, honoring some 30 library volunteers. Outgoing president of the Friends, Suzan Redgate, thanked the volunteers for their time and good will and also welcomed the new president of the group, Betsey Detwiler and the new chairman of the trustees of the library, Patience Towle.

Summer hours

Please note that the library will be closed Sundays during June, July and August.

Library Friends Moira Stansell, Monica McKenney, and Carol Riley, pose with volunteer Lucille McLoughlin, chairman of the library trustees Patience Towle, and new president of the Friends, Betsey Detwiler at a reception last week at Barbara Powers' home.

Cohasset has golden place in games' history

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

As America gears up for "The Games" this summer in Atlanta — Cohasset can be proud of its own Olympic heritage.

Ellery H. Clark Sr., who lived at 262 Jerusalem Road, won two first-place medals at the revival of the ancient Olympic games in Athens in 1896.

And luckily for posterity, Ellery Sr. took along his Kodak camera and kept a personal journal of his experiences.

In celebration of the 100th anniversary of the first modern Olympic games, two of Clark's grandchildren, William Clark and Vicki Clark Widner, are telling his story in a tour of cities across the country. Eastman Kodak is sponsoring

Clark won two firsts and Blake, the first winner of the Boston Marathon, competed in the marathon at the 1896 Olympics but did not finish. Local superstar captured 1896 Olympics on film

TAMPA — Ellery Clark was America's athlete superstar at the turn of the century. He was the national decathlon champion twice, after he had won two top medals in the first modern Olympic Games.

At the 1896 Games in Athens, Greece, the first Olympics held in 1,502 years, Clark won first-place medals in the long jump and the high jump.

""He was very, very famous for his day," says his proud grandson, William Clark of Severna Park, Md.

The photographs Clark took in Athens include the opening ceremonies, the U.S. team holding a

August special town meeting called to reconsider school

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Monday, 500 citizens, led by a new taxpayers' group, have called for a special town meeting to reconsider the March 30 annual town meeting vote approving the $9.9 million new elementary school.

Emotions reached a fever pitch on both sides of the issue at the selectmen's meeting this week when two members of the board tried to put off scheduling the special town meeting until town counsel could be consulted.

And if the mood at town hall Monday night is a harbinger of what's to come then the Aug. 12 special town meeting could be the hottest in recent memory.

Apparently a simple majority vote at a special town meeting can rescind a prior town meeting vote which would nullify the override (the funding mechanism for the school).

If that did occur, it's not clear how the town would pay for the partial bonding for school plans and architectural fees that is already in place.

By law, selectmen must set a special town meeting within 45 days of receiving a petition with at least 200 signatures of registered voters.

In a majority vote, selectmen set the special town meeting for Aug. 12 but that wasn't until Selectman Ronnie McMorris challenged Concerned Cohasset Taxpayer

Cohasset's Week

'Thickly settled' sign ok'ed for Fair Oaks

Fair Oaks Lane will be posted with signs warning drivers of "Children At Play" and "Thickly Settled Area" but won't get a posted speed limit, selectmen said this week.

A recent traffic study revealed that only 2 percent of the vehicles travelling on Fair Oaks exceeded 30 miles per hour. Selectmen reached a consensus that "Thickly Settled Area" might have more impact on drivers than a 30 mph posting.

No bumps on Bancroft Rd.

Due to the expense, possible vandalism and lack of support among neighbors, temporary speed bumps will not be installed on Bancroft Road selectmen said this week.

However, selectmen concurred with Safety Officer Clifton B. Jones that increased police presence on the road would help answer traffic concerns there.

Cutting room is still up

Much to the annoyance of at least one diehard member of the Hagerty Committee, the cutting room at the two-acre town-owned site is still up and packed with stuff again.

Parker Avenue resident Russ Bonetti asked selectmen this week why they had never followed through on their votes that the cutting room (a metal structure) be removed.

Selectmen Merle Brown and Michael Sullivan said they saw no need to rush to tear down the structure because the plans to develop the site into a recreational area could move forward if the building stayed up or not.

They said the structure provides a valuable service as a storage facility for surplus town equipment.

"If the town had studied the school thing half as long as the Hagerty thing we wouldn't be in this shape now," Bonetti said alluding to the history of the Hagerty committee which goes back at least three years.

Selectman Peter Pratt agreed that the building should go.

"It's unsightly and the town paid for open space there," he said. "The Hagerty committee is right to keep the pressure on us to demolish it."

However Paul Pattison, who also sits on the Hagerty Committee, asked selectmen to think before getting rid of any structures at the site. He warned that once something is gone — in an area like the Hagerty property which is mostly wetlands — under current environmental laws, the town may be prohibited from ever being able to build another structure at the site.

"Think about it," he said.

Selectmen have authorized that the former Cohasset Colonials showroom/office building to be removed or demolished. Paul Trendowicz owner of Cohasset Marina across Parker Avenue is interested in using the structure for his business.

Pattison urged the newly elected selectmen to walk the Hagerty site which they agreed to do.

Bonetti also asked that something be done about the lawn at the showroom which is knee high.

Appointments made; resignation accepted

Selectmen appointed Patricia Chase, 25 Red Gate Lane, to the school facilities committee recently. They also made the following reappointments: Mary McElr[illegible] to the computer study committee and Michelle Buckley and Christopher Laugelle to the disabilities commission.

Selectmen also accepted with regret the resignation of John J. Calabro from the school facilities commission. Calabro said he stepped down due to "professional work loads and changes in personal status affecting his availability for service."

Austin L. Ahearn, 41 Clayspring Rd., notified selectmen he is interested in serving on the disabilities commission. The South Shore Regional School District Committee which governs South Shore Vo-Tech in Hanover wrote to selectmen alerting them that Cohasset's representative Laurence J. Mitchell's term expires June 30.

Emmy Award sounds good to Cohasset resident

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

When Edward Hettstrom's name was announced as the winner of a New England Emmy Award he was so surprised he was glued to his seat.

Well, actually, being stuck in his chair was a combination of his surprise and his wife Karen's happiness.

"I didn't know if she was going to let me go — she was hugging me," he said.

"I've got to go now," he told her.

Hettstrom received his award on May 11 at the Majestic Theater in Boston, and since the event, which is sponsored by the National Association of Television Arts and Sciences, gets bigger every year several television crews and crowds of people were on hand.

He earned his Emmy for his stereo broadcast of a Boston Bruins game that took place at the Fleet Center last fall.

The Fleet Center has better acoustics than the Boston Garden, Hettstrom modestly said, and he had a little extra time to set up additional microphones.

"You heard the grunts and groans, skates grinding. the talking of the players — things you never heard before. It really sounded good, " the 44-year-old said.

He was impressed with the work he had done, but didn't expect the praise it received.

"I was shocked," he said. "For a few minutes I was speechless. People barely say 'Hi' to me and now they are applauding me."

Strangely enough, in his work at United Paramount Network's Channel 38 Hettstrom is in the "sight" rather than "sound" department.

However, he did work for many years before that in stereo broadcasting. The station needed someone to cover the audio for this game, so he stepped up.

"It is ironic," he said about the award. "I tried for most of my career to get away from audio."

Hettstrom, who lives on Church Street, with his wife, and two daughters Erica and Tara, is no stranger to Emmy awards, he has received many in the past, but never for an individual project.

"This is the first time I actually got a statue," he said.

Aptly, he put the award on top of his new wide-screen television.

Hettstrom's love for the production part of television began when he was in the eighth grade at East Middle School in Braintree

Students were involved in putting together educational shows, which were shown in every classroom during homeroom.

Hettstrom remembers Mrs. Cameron, who was the star of the "Penmanship show."

"Students had quite a bit to do with it," Hettstrom said. "I thought it was wonderful."

He didn't have a chance to follow his dream further until he attended Emerson College. After he graduated he went into radio.

"I wanted to get into producing and directing, but (Boston) is a tough market to get into. It is the sixth largest in the United states," he explained. "So I snuck in the back door."

He started at Channel 38 in 1979 after spending several years in radio.

Hettstrom left the audio segment of sports in 1985 and began filming entertainment and documentary segments.

He was involved with features on musical groups, and helped put together, "Movie Loft and Company".

Hettstrom even had the opportunity to film Tip O'Neill, during "Dinner with ..."

Although he moved on to other venues in television, it is not to say that audio is not challenging.

There is a certain art in the placement of microphones, and intense concentration is required to match the sound with the action.

For example, if a hockey puck is in one corner, Hettstrom would boost the sound in that area.

"All my fingers and thumbs are on all the controls," he explained. "(You) place each sound in its own special spot in space and time," he said.

To be successful, Hettstrom said, you have to be aware of the finer points.

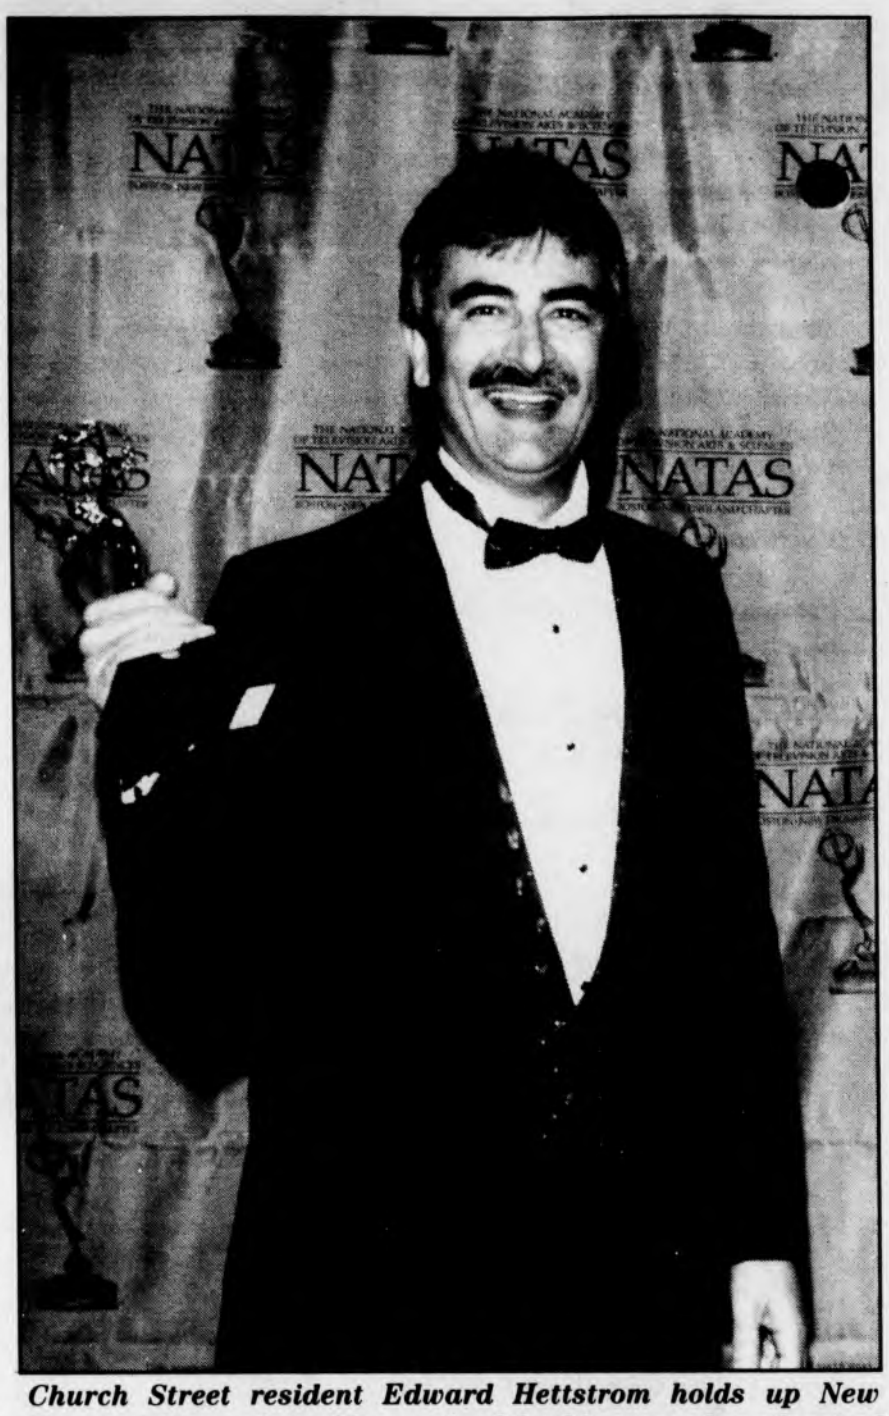
"Part of the job, in television especially, is that you have to be a stickler. It is the people who pay attention to the details that separate the normal from the real good, " he said.

Hettstrom said he will continue to submit work when he feels it is "something special."

"I like to see how I stack up against my peers," he said.

Although he got to keep the award, his mom, who lives in Braintree, got the picture which was taken at the ceremony.

"She'll put it in her room, or wherever moms put pictures of their sons," Hettstrom said.



Church Street resident Edward Hettstrom holds up New England Emmy Award he received for his stereo broadcast of a Boston Bruins game.

Fastballs get clocked at Teen Center benefit

The Cohasset Teen Center summer hours are Fridays and Saturdays, 7 to 10 p.m.

During Harborfest/Festival on the Common '96, one such FUN fund-raiser was the Cohasset Teen Center Fastball Radar Speed Trap, located opposite the Community Center. Speeders were handed not tickets by "police" volunteers, but certificates recording the speed of their best softball pitch, soccer kick or lacrosse host. Unofficial record holders for this year are as follows:

The softball pitch record holders for age 2 are Drew Cobin, Phillip Galligan and Alli Jacobs; age 8, D.J. Silvia; age 10, Jen Buckley; age 11, Kendra Topalian and Ian Kidder; age 12, Will Prendergast and Josh Ethier; age 13, Ray Cavanaugh; age 14, G. O'Keefe; age 15, J.P. Laugelle and age 16, Shaun Galvin. For the dads, dads Straughn and McDonnell led after a strong start by dad Faber. The reigning fast pitch grandmother is Mary Jeanette Murray.

Jack Murphy and his Dad get ready to see how fast their softball throws are during Harborfest. Proceeds from this event benefitted the Teen Center.

The soccer kick top speeds are held by 2-year-old Drew Cobin and 4-year-old Timmy Farwell. For age 6, Bradley Antenore; age 7, Andrew Clark; age 8, Matt O'Connell, age 9, champs are Jake Kovach and Lauren Putnam; age 12, Ben Carleton; age 13, Michael Sanchez; age 14, Michelle Dinsmore and age 15, (and rumor has it he was barefoot), Morgan Bigley.

The fastest lacrosse shots clocked were for Brett Trachnir, age 8; Teddie Straughn, age 9; Sean Connolly, age 10; Henry Roth, age 11; Greg Harrington, age 12; Chris Caron, age 13; Jake Motley, age 15; and for the dads, dad McDonnell.

Lacrosse ball throws were clocked, and winners in their respective age groups are Drew Cobin, (again), Zoe Evans, Jack Hobbs and Robert Jones, Julie Connelly, Kennan Ross Startzell and Wesley Ulmer. Molly Kirk, Mike Devine, Even Pestone, Tim Straughn, Danielle Kupsc, Chris Green, Philip Pierce and Jen Meehan were all tops for their age. There were some other impressive records set, not higher records perhaps, but impressive records. Some Friday or Saturday results may have been erased overnight, and we apologize if your accomplishments have gone unacknowledged. The important thing is that you know your champion score. If you didn't get the opportunity to try your skills, start warming up for next year.

The center wishes to thank all who helped with the event, and all the athletes who tested their mettle.

August special town meeting called to reconsider vote

head Roy Fitzsimmons to explain the rush to action.

"I've heard over and over that we rushed the new school — why are you rushing a special town meeting while people are on vacation?" she asked.

McMorris added that the elderly might find it difficult to get to an August special town meeting because there is no air conditioning.

Fitzsimmons said his group did not intend to disenfranchise anyone but was reacting to concerns about several school issues including the override ballot vote that had to be validated by the legislature due to a posting snafu; issues raised by the design review board; and changes to the proposed school site.

"I understand all your concerns, but why call it now?" McMorris interjected.

Fitzsimmons said many have said they want to have another chance to talk over the project.

Selectman Michael Sullivan asked that the group consider holding the petition long enough so selectmen could schedule the special town meeting the Monday following Labor Day when it could be "inclusive to the whole community."

Fitzsimmons said it was "their right" to call the meeting in August.

During the exchanges, some 15 people in attendance — who appeared to be either members of or sympathizers with the taxpayers' group — murmured their disapproval at times and applauded when selectmen set the date.

Selectmen Merle Brown, Nan Roth and Peter Pratt voted to set the town meeting date immediately but said the board would go to town counsel to iron out the legal issues.

Pratt said the date couldn't be put off.

"That's the way the system works," he said.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, school Supt. Stephen Hart said there may be some legal questions.

"I've never heard of this happening before," he said.

Although plans for the new school will move forward, Hart said alternative proposals to upgrade the Osgood School may have to be looked at.

"We can't continue without more space and handicapped-accessibility at Osgood," said Hart, noting Osgood repairs, expansion and upgrades could cost as much or more than a new school.

School supporters worked tirelessly to get the vote out for the Jan. 22 special town meeting and the March 30 annual town meeting. At both meetings the school project passed overwhelmingly and at the annual town meeting, it survived a motion to reconsider launched by Fitzsimmons. The first override failed at the ballot box by 28 votes on Feb. 10. But the scaled back version of the school passed by 80 votes April 6.

The special town meeting may not just be limited to the school. Town boards may submit articles and citizens may submit articles if they have 100 signatures until the warrant closes July 12.

Roth asked if an article to reaffirm the school vote could be placed on the warrant if 100 signatures were gathered.

Public way status is sought

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

The Planning Board told Wheelwright Farm condominium owners there was nothing officially the board could do to change the development's private way road status to that of a public way.

Frank and Marge Libby appeared before the board recently to request the change, saying that for their tax dollars, they were only seeking to receive basic town services which other residents already receive.

Condominium owners are assessed the same tax rate as single dwelling homeowners, but also pay monthly fees into condominium trusts. These fees are for specific services (garbage removal, landscaping, painting, etc.) which are contracted out to private companies.

Upset with the fact that during winter months town snow plows bypass the entrance and exit road of the 42-unit site, the Libbys feel that, public way or private way, all town residents should be treated equally.

(It is estimated that approximately 48 percent of Cohasset roads are listed as private ways.)

"We've become second-class citizens of Cohasset," Frank Libby stated.

Board Chairman Al Moore cited the fact that the highway department does plow private driveways and roads with three or more houses on them (Pond Street and Fair Oaks Lane were mentioned), but said that a cluster development (condominium complex) is a different situation.

"It's a very gray area where town vehicles go and plow," he said, adding, "It's a decision for the Board of Selectmen to make."

Moore suggested the Libbys ask selectmen if they would instruct the highway department to start plowing the Wheelwright Farm complex. Failing that, the only other recourse would be to have the private way changed to a public way by vote of Town Meeting.

Board member Bob Sturdy, in noting Wheelwright Farm's condominium by-laws stating the status of the road not be changed, took a hard-line stance.

"You knew what you were buying and what you were getting into, and I think you should live with that," he said. And in referring to a change of road status, warned, "I would speculate that snowplowing will be the least of your problems. It's a can of worms."

Fellow board member William Good was more sympathetic. "These people came in good faith, looking for us to be the voice of reason," he said.

Moore agreed, and asked the Libbys to inform the Planning Board of the date they will go before the Board of Selectmen, saying he will make sure at least one member of the Planning Board will be there in support of the Libbys' request.

In other business, the board discussed the proposed improvements to the Sunoco service station adjacent to the Super Stop & Shop on Route 3A.

Initial plans had called for the exterior of the existing building to be upgraded on three sides (the back of the building was not being done) in either simulated brick or a brick-like veneer.

But board member John O'Toole observed that from the highway, the rear of the building was noticeable, and requested that particular portion be upgraded as well.

Attorney Charles Humphries, representing the service station owners, felt the board was being overly petty considering the extent to which other improvements are scheduled to be undertaken at the facility.

In the end, though, he relented, saying, "Put in your conditions and we'll do it."

The board put on hold its final approval for the plans of the parent owners, Sun Oil Company, as comments on the project from the town's Design Review Board have not yet been received.

CHS '94 grad excels at Air Force Academy

The DeMichele Family certainly has had a lot to celebrate lately. Read on and you will see what I mean. Daniel Ryan DeMichele graduated from Georgetown University May 25, receiving a bachelor's degree in economics. Daniel is employed by the public relations firm Burson Marstellar in Washington, D.C.

Marnie Laura DeMichele is a recipient of the dean's award fro academic excellence at Colgate University for both the fall and spring semesters of her sophomore year. A geography major, Marnie leaves in July for a semester of study in beautiful Australia!

Daniel and Marnie are the children of Don and Susan DeMichele, and you can bet your bottom dollar they are super proud of their offspring! So are we!

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Jim Contis, and here's to many more, Jim! You are the best!

In conjunction with South Shore Music Circus, the Sisters of St. Joseph are holding their first fund-raiser for their retreat center in Cohasset. They are arranging for the purchase of tickets to "An Evening of Irish Music with Phil Coulter," the internationally renowned Irish musician, on Saturday evening, July 20, at 8 p.m. Tickets may be purchased by calling 383-6024.

The sisters are also hosting a silent auction to assist with their fund-raising campaign. Their auction will consist of two front-row seats at South Shore Music Circus for an evening with country singer/superstar Vince Gill, Saturday, Aug. 3, at 5 p.m., as well as a complete supreme entertainment package, including dinner and an overnight stay for two at Kimballs By The Sea. Call 383-6024 for more information.

All of the folks from Champagne Alley want to be sure you wish Al (Sandy) Rose a happy 50th birthday when you see him July 13. We sure do, too. Hope the next 50 are good to you, Sandy!

Here is news from Maine that is all about an "old" Cohassetite, Dr. Keith N. Megathlin! Keith graduated from CHS in the early '60s, and is a graduate of Middlebury College in Vermont. He received his doctor of medicine degree from the University of Vermont School of Medicine. He served as an allergy fellow for the Department of Pediatrics at Medical College of Virginia.

In 1995, Dr. Megathlin was the recipient of the Distinguished Service Award from the American Lung Association of Maine. Now patients suffering from asthma and allergies can soon seek help, education and relief at a new clinic in Bridgton, Maine, at Northern Cumberland Memorial Hospital. Dr. Megathlin established the Portland-based Allergy and Asthma Associates of Maine in 1975, and there are now four physicians in the practice. In addition to the new NCMH/Bridgton site, they have an office in Augusta, and will be opening another this August in Brunswick. Another CHS grad puts our schools on the map. Yeah, Kit!

Speaking of CHS grads, Andy Kamataris, Class of 1994, has just completed his freshman year at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs. He worked hard and earned himself a 3.17 GPA. Isn't that grand?

As part of his summer program, he just completed survival training (Andy wants to be a pilot). He will be back in Cohasset July 17 for a week and a half to visit all his friends. Andy's mom, Normandie Nigh, will be coming here, too. (She now makes her home in Marina Del Ray, Calif.) Lots of you will be excited to read the news of Andy's visit!

That's Andy Kamataris, a 1994 CHS grad, who just completed his first year at the U.S. Air Force Academy with a 3.17 GPA.

July 8 will be a special day, indeed. That is the day Anne Campbell turns 93-years-young! Many happy returns of the day to you, Mrs. Campbell!

We applaud Peter Maich, who was named Humanitarian of the Year by Cardinal Cushing School and Training Center, located in Hanover. Mr. Maich was honored for his efforts to enhance the mission of the special needs school to provide the best educational program for its students. He is executive vice president of merchandising for T.J. Maxx/Marshalls, and is living proof of the old adage, "Ask a busy person . . . ." Congratulations!

Celebrate spirit of Independence Day

American families are getting ready for a special day.

They are buying fireworks, planning picnics and making travel arrangements.

This is one of the biggest family events of the summer. It's probably the only summertime occasion that's as big a deal to small children as it is to their parents.

Our airports, highways, train stations and bus terminals are jammed with holiday travelers.

Americans go to a lot of trouble — and often travel a lot of miles — to celebrate during Independence Day.

But, are we celebrating America's independence?

Adults must help youngsters understand the meaning of Independence Day. That means adults cannot forget the significance of the holiday.

This task is important because Americans cannot support a democracy on the sheer quest for material things. Our young people have to learn to appreciate the special aspects of America that allow us to earn a decent living — with proper training and hard work.

There's no better way for us to do that than to pause during our celebrations and reflect on how great it is to be Americans.

We've got it good here in the United States. We've got it so good that often we forget about the sacrifices which make America a reasonably safe place in a war-beaten world.

Legionnaires want to help America keep the record straight. Legionnaires know that American freedom is a byproduct of American sacrifice. Legionnaires know that whenever it was time for America to step up, in a role of military leadership, our men and women in the armed forces answered the call. Legionnaires know that American-style freedom was not free. And never will be.

We also know that the American flag has been the unifying symbol of everything for which American soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines fought.

The American Legion supports a constitutional amendment to protect the American flag from intentional physical desecration. The flag that hangs from residential porches and balconies on Independence Day is not the equivalent of a Halloween jack-o-lantern. The flag symbolizes the fight for our nation's sovereignty and the struggle for freedom the world over involving American forces. The flag deserves a special place in our society, shielded from those who want to burn it to make a statement.

We need to link American values to family values and teach our children to appreciate United States citizenship. The Fourth of July is a great time to do this.

A love of God and country. An understanding of the historical role of America's veterans. An appreciation for the flag and for the uniqueness of American-style freedom. These are among the values which are often missing from family Independence Day festivities. Without those values, the fireworks and picnics are mere celebrations of a day off of work.

For too many of our children, history is last school year and the future is next weekend. Sacrifice is missing a favorite TV show. Respect is a one-way street, from parent to child. We adults, who know something is wrong, can make a difference. We have to take a time-out and talk to the kids about the beautiful uniqueness of America.

Let's have a safe and enjoyable Fourth of July holiday. Bring on the food, friends, family and fireworks. But let's celebrate what we should be celebrating.

We must pause on Independence Day to recognize Americans preserving freedom in Bosnia as well as those who represented America on other military missions.

We must pause to remember that American-style freedom was not free. And never will be.

Daniel A. Ludwig is national commander of The American Legion, the nation's largest veterans organization.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thanks for festival support

To the Editor:

The South Shore Art Center's Festival on the Common has come and gone, but hopefully many enjoyable memories were left behind. We wish we could thank each volunteer by name, but with 36 committee chairs overseeing hundreds of volunteers we'd need to borrow the Mariner for the week! Whether you made telephone calls, helped with mailings or volunteered for several hours, please know that the Art Center appreciates your support. Every effort counts towards the final result. A successful festival benefits the center all year long by allowing us to continue our educational outreach programs, scholarships to graduating seniors, the operation of our free gallery and exhibitions and our goal of bringing arts to the more than 41 towns in our region.

As always, we must mention the incredible support we receive from the Town of Cohasset and all the various departments. Each year we receive invaluable guidance and help from the Police and Fire Departments, Peter Laguelle from Tree and Parks, Harold Litchfield and his crew at the Highway Dept., Bob Egan our Building Inspector, Health Inspector Godzik, Wire Inspector Steve Wigmore, The Cohasset Selectmen, Grey Doyon who guides us through the maze of permits and Sandra Murray who was always so pleasant even after countless calls and messages.

Working with Wayne Sawchuk and the crew at the Strawberry Festival, and Bob Martin and Jim Lagrotteria from Harborfest, continues to be a great cooperative effort with everyone helping each other out.

Thanks to the Mariner Newspapers — the support of a community newspaper is so important!

Every year we give each participant (vendor/crafter) a survey to return. The comments are the best part of Festival — "I have over 65 shows a year and nowhere are the people nicer!" — "The children are the most well-behaved of any." — "You must pinch yourself every time you wake up in this beautiful town" — "The people are fabulous — what's in your water?"

Thanks to everyone who visited the Festival and mark your calendars — plans are already underway for June 20, 21, and 22, 1997!

Kudos to Nan for her down-to-earth approach

To the Editor:

HOORAY FOR NAN ROTH!

It was refreshing to hear a voice of common sense during a recent selectmen's meeting. The board was discussing options for legal rulings, review of CHL expansion traffic patterns, direction from DPU, observations and recommendation from the police chief; apparently posturing for a confrontation with Mr. Barry over his trash trucks traveling King Street. Mrs. Roth, interested in dealing with issues realistically, asked, "Why don't we just call Mr. Barry and ask him to use an alternative route?" What a down-to-earth, business approach to a perceived problem.

Thank you, Nan, perhaps this is the start of a new way of doing business at the selectmen's office.

Local superstar captured 1896 Olympics on film huge American flag and a self-portrait in an athletic pose.

While visiting Tampa recently, William Clark, 57, a disaster relief official with the U.S. Public Health Service, showed off his grandfather's wood- and leather-framed camera and one of his medals, as well as some of the photographs.

A spokeswoman for Kodak says the company is sponsoring the tour because Clark, who was using a Kodak, was one of the first to chronicle the Olympics on film, and "in salute to the valuable contribution he made to photography and to the Olympic games."

The United States was one of 13 countries participating in the Games, which had been revived after a crusade by French nobleman Pierre de Coubertin.

The first Olympics was held in 776 B.C. and continued in Roman-occupied Greece until 394 A.D. Emperor Theodosius, a Christian who found the Games barbaric, abolished them.

In 1896, the 13 athletes on the U.S. team were recruited by Princeton University and the Boston Athletic Association (BAA).

The dean at Harvard University grudgingly gave senior Ellery Clark 30 days leave from his classes, cautioning him not to stretch the facts about his performance and not to link Harvard to the event.

""You go, as I understand it, in the capacity of a BAA man, and the fact that you are a Harvard man is, so to speak, accidental," wrote L.B.R. Briggs.

The nation was strongly isolationist at the time, and "Briggs may have been partially motivated by that," William Clark says.

Without fanfare, the athletes departed for Athens by steamship.

After crossing the Atlantic, the team traveled by train across Italy, took a ship across the Adriatic Sea and another train across Greece. They arrived in Athens on April 5, the day before the start of the games.

Clark says the Americans created a sensation in the contests with their Boston Athletic Association cheer: "B-A-A, rah-rah-rah!" After a while, the crowd took up the chant. At the reception following the games, King George of Greece asked the Americans to do the cheer one more time.

Americans also demonstrated the young game of baseball at the reception. They used a walking cane for a bat and hard rolls for balls. When they ran out of rolls, someone produced an orange. When the bat connected, the orange splattered all over the splendid uniform of a Greek court official, "which then ended the baseball demonstration," Clark laughs.

The American Olympic athletes were hailed as heroes when they arrived home, having won 19 medals, second only to Greece. The top medals were silver then, not gold.

The mayor of Boston and leading citizens chartered a train to transport the heroes from New York. They were given a banquet at a ritzy hotel and a reception in Boston's historic Faneuil Hall. (William Clark says his grandfather never related Dean Briggs' reaction.)

"Their lives were forever changed, being America's first-ever Olympic champions," says Clark, who plans to be on hand at the centennial of the event in Atlanta this July.

In 1897 and 1903, Ellery Clark won the all-around — the term then for decathlon — national championships, and his reputation was sealed. His grandson says he wrote in a report for the 50-year reunion of his Harvard class that once he won the all-around the second time, he was forever "branded an athlete."

People thought he was out of his mind when he signed up for the 1903 event, William Clark says. "He was an old man of 28."

The all-around competition consisted of the 100-yard run, the 16-pound shot put, the running high jump, the 880-yard race walk, the 16-pound hammer throw, the pole vault, 120-yard high hurdle, 56-pound weight toss, running broad jump and the one-mile run.

""They would give them a good five minutes in between events," says Clark.

Ellery Clark earned a law degree but never practiced, although books on Massachusetts law were among the 30 he wrote during his lifetime.

He also wrote novels. His book "Loaded Dice" was made into a 1930 movie of the same name. Another book, "Carib Gold," became the 1952 movie "Caribbean," a pirate adventure starring John Payne.

The athlete spent most of his career as executive secretary of the Massachusetts Humane Society, a lifesaving organization with varied missions, from teaching children to swim to operating lifeboat stations along the coast for rescuing shipwreck victims.

"He did that his entire life," says William Clark.

He was 11 when his grandfather died at age 75 in 1949. It was a great loss to him, he says, since the old man was a model grandfather. He often took his grandson fishing and doted on him when, at age 7 or 8, William won junior boxing titles.

He says Ellery Clark was modest about his own titles.

"If you didn't know he was such a great athlete, he would not be the first to tell you. He would probably be the last to tell you, and he'd only tell you if it was drawn out."

Cohasset has golden place in games' history

the trip (see related story, courtesy of the Tampa Tribune).

William Clark, who attended first grade at the Osgood School, says his family lived full-time in Cohasset until his father, Ellery H. Clark, Jr., was appointed to the faculty at the United States Naval Academy. Then the family moved to Maryland but continued to spend summers in Cohasset.

That's the reverse of what Ellery Sr. did. William Clark says grandfather, who grew up in Boston, started spending summers in Cohasset as a boy but lived here "virtually his whole adult life." He took the train from Cohasset to Boston to work as executive secretary of the Mass. Humane Society.

William, says he and his sister, who is an elementary school principal, are "having the time of our lives bringing back to life the memory of our grandfather, the BAA (Boston Athletic Assoc.) team of 1896 and the other American athletes."

Deputy director of the office of emergency preparedness at the U.S. Dept. of Public Health, William says he's appalled at the lack of attention the 1896 games are receiving.

While this year celebrates the 100th anniversary of the revival of the games — in 1896, it had been 1,502 years since the last Olympics.

The 1896 United States Olympic team poses in Athens with the flag. That's Ellery Clark, far right, holding the corner of the flag.

The American athletes' departure for the games went virtually unnoticed but their triumphant return was cause for celebration and undoubtedly sparked enthusiasm for continued U.S. participation in the games over the years.

The American team in 1896 joined less than 300 other athletes from 13 nations in the Athens event. This year 200 nations and 10,000 athletes will participate in Atlanta.

"When we talk, we try to put it in context, William says. "In 1896, there were no phones, no automobiles, no communications (on today's standards) — just getting to the games in 1986 was an Olympic event."

Ironically, it was another Cohasseter that sparked the interest at the Boston Athletic Club (BAA) to send a contingent of athletes to Athens.

Arthur Blake, who won the first Boston Marathon, lived on Atlantic Avenue.

"(Following his marathon victory) he remarked in jest, 'I'm too good for Boston, I should go to the Olympics,'" William says.

The BAA liked the idea and started to get a team together.

Sadly for Blake, the 30-day trip over on board ship (except for one day on Gibraltar where he could run around), did not allow him to train properly. He collapsed at the 17-mile mark in the Athens marathon.

The Boston-area team was made up of BAA members, save one who was from the Suffolk Athletic Club; the others hailed from Princeton, New Jersey.

One of three American double-medal winners at the games, Ellery Clark Sr. won firsts in the long jump and high jump competitions. First place medals in the 1896 games were solid silver.

"Second-place medals were bronze and third-place winners got a hardy handshake," William says.

William's father Ellery Jr., who is retired, returned to the area full-time in 1992. Ellery Jr., who will be 85 in August, lives in Scituate and is very active in athletic competitions for senior citizens.

Although he makes his home in Severna Park, Maryland — William looks fondly on his Cohasset roots and his grandfather's contribution to Olympic history.

"It's a wonderful story for people in the entire Boston area in general and Cohasset in particular," he says.

"Two of America's original 13 (Olympic) athletes were from Cohasset. That's an amazing fact for a small town."

Cohasset in hit novel

Has anyone noticed a mention of Cohasset in Chapter 31 of Robert B. Parker's new Spenser novel, "Chance" (#15 on this week's New York Times best-seller list)? "Gino Fish lived in a big colonial house on the ocean side of Jerusalem Road in Cohasset. There was a circular drive in front and a lawn that sloped to the seawall behind. The house was done in white cedar shingles which had silvered in the salt air, the way they're supposed to. . . ." Sounds like the Riley house, where Parker watched the pilot show of "Spenser For Hire," starring Robert Urich, which was taped about 10 years ago. The library has three copies of "Chance," according to Susan Pope, librarian, so get your name on the waiting list.

Story hour, puzzle club

A story hour for pre-school children will begin Friday, July 5, and will take place every Friday throughout the summer from 10 to 10:45 a.m. in the children's room of the Paul Pratt Library. Children must be 3-1/2 year of age. No registration is required.

Deer Hill School librarian Marge Murphy will conduct the very popular Puzzle Club beginning Monday and Tuesday, July 8 and 9, from 7 to 8:45 p.m., continuing until the last week of August. Children in grades two through six are welcome. Be sure to bring your library cards. Popsicles, courtesy of Friends of the Paul Pratt Library, will be served at 8 p.m. Parents must pick up their children no later than 8:45 p.m.

Quiet treasures unearthed

Quiet treasures hide in the north corner of the Paul Pratt Library, on a shelf of extra-large "coffee table" books. Glossy tomes appealing to almost every interest imaginable — gardening, history, art, home decorating and sports are waiting to be checked out. Peruse titles such as: "Bathrooms," "House Beautiful Bedrooms," "Catalog to Winslow Homer Exhibit," "Life and Times of Bobby Jones" and "The Art of the New Yorker."

Depth strengthens swimmers

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The only thing that could possibly have been lacking from the Cohasset swim team's 130-member squad this season was space in the pool. But head coaches Becky Golden and Allison Hughes have broken up the daily four-hour practice time into groups, giving the swimmers plenty of room to perfect their strokes heading into Friday's South Shore Swim League opener against Hanover at 1 p.m.

Golden can't help but have high expectations for this year's team. Her expectations, however, are outweighed by her excitement of coaching a team she has close bonds with. A '94 graduate of Cohasset High School, Golden spent 13 years on the summer squad and now competes for Colby College.

"I'm so excited to be back," she said, "I really am. I have a goal to bring the program back to the way I remember it when I was in the 8-and-under group. Swimming was my whole summer."

Cohasset has a "ton of new swimmers and a lot of returnees" Golden said. The reason can be traced to the fact that for the first time there were no swimmers cut from the team, leaving Golden and Hughes with several options as to the way they can use their athletes.

The 17-and-under team should be led by Becky's brother, Justin Golden, as well as Derek Bugley, Mike O'Hart, and Sue Gill and Cere Osterborg on the girls' side. Jeff Schneider, Chris Golden (Becky's other brother), John Crowley-Buck, Allison Berg, Jenna O'Brien and Sarah Harkness look to be big point-scorers for the 14-and-under group.

Golden has enjoyed coaching her two brothers, something she has always wanted to do. "It's great," Golden said. "They're both really supportive of me."

The team is especially deep in the younger age divisions. Golden says the swimmers will be nothing short of "outstanding" with their points going a long way in Cohasset's attempt to defeat the Scituate K of C and the Aqua-Dux club out of Duxbury. Golden believes the two teams look to be the strongest in the SSSL.

Kara Foley, Alex Berg, Tim Ulmer, Carlie Carter, Rob Lehr and Alex Etkind have been impressive in practicing with the rest of the 12-and-under swimmers, as have the 10-and-under standouts of Mike Ernst, Tess Foley, Emily Simmons and Casey Anderson. The youngest age group has also proved its mettle in the pool with Zack Markert, Reed Dickinson, Lindsay Durkin, Alyssa Campbell and Charlotte Sida leading the youngsters.

Golden and Hughes are focusing on stroke work since practice started last Monday. Team enthusiasm is high on Golden's list, as is getting the various age groups to interact with one another. So far, the two rookie coaches have nothing to complain about with near-perfect attendance from their swimmers and concentrated efforts in the mix.

"We have a really well-rounded team," Golden said.

The meet against Hanover will give the coaches the chance to look over Cohasset swimming under competitive conditions. She isn't worried, though, with the diversity among the team.

For Hughes, the meet will give her a chance to see how strong her former athletes are. She was Hanover's coach last year before coming to Cohasset.

The coaching relationship between Hughes and Golden is especially safe. Golden says both of them work off of each other well and have similar goals this year.

"I'm definitely more excited than nervous," Golden said, "because we're co-coaches and work together well."

With their knowledge and competitive background in swimming, this could be the starting of a beautiful relationship, one the team could reap the benefits from.

15+ Intermediates: Tara Hettstrom placed fifth on bars and Erica Hettstrom placed fifth in the all around, sixth on bars and third on the floor exercise.

Dodgers face A's in Little League series

BY KEVIN LEWIS
Special to the Mariner

The Dodgers, sponsored by the Cohasset Permanent Firefighters, will play the A's, sponsored by Stop & Shop, in the year's championship series. This will mark the fifth time in the last six years the Dodgers have reached the finals.

The A's, behind the the fine pitching performance of D.J. Lanzalotti and Kevin Hanian, defeated the Pirates. The Pirates put up a gallant fight, especially in the second game where Chris Carr pitched a strong game only to lose 1-0.

Trevor Hardie, Jimmy French, Nick Cavanaugh, Trey Curry and Scott Faber all had hits for the A's during the series. Willie McArthur, Tim Anton, Mark Chapman and Alex Berg played well in the field.

The Dodgers defeated the Red Sox, who had defeated both the Cards and the Mets to reach the semi-finals. Brendan Byrne, Andrew Walsh and Liam Martin pitched extremely well to earn the victories.

Jeff Scribner and Brendan Byrne each hit a home run in the series. Brian Lewis, Kyle Webber, Andrew Walsh, William Prendergast, Yari Martin and Mark Lewis all had hits during the series.

Liam Martin, Curt Kahn and Andrew Lovalo played well defensively.

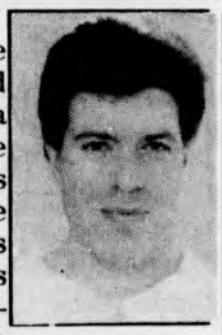
Gymnastics trials leave lasting memories

The moment was unimaginable to Ruthann Ardizzoni. There, from the suite she shared with the families and members of the Cohasset High gymnastics team, Ardizzoni watched as the United States Olympic Gymnastics Teams were presented their awards. Ardizzoni was so moved, if Clark Chatterton put a lifetime contract to continue coaching gymnastics at CHS before her, she would have signed without reading the small print.

Yes, she was that moved.

"I can't even imagine the feeling," said Ardizzoni. "I was filling up with tears because I was so proud of them. On the same token, I felt bad for the seven who didn't make the team."



Reardon

Ardizzoni wishes the parent of every child who ever attempted a difficult routine on the balance beam, or bars was able to watch the country's best gymnasts perform their routines under enormous pressure. The parents, who believe their children could never possibly succumb to the pressure of high-school sports, would have been surprised to know the best gymnasts in the country go through the same ups and downs, aches and pains, euphoria and disappointment as their own children, albeit, at a different level.

Still, the amazement of watching Dominique Dawes pull off a near-perfect bar routine illustrated just how far the gap is between inspiring gymnasts and those who have reached the world-class level.

Take 12-year-old Caitlin Flint. Caitlin looks to be one of the backbones of the Skippers' high school program in the coming years. She has already accomplished a lot for a girl her age. Parents and gymnastics groupies will travel to the CHS gymnastics room to watch Caitlin strut her stuff, much the same way Erica and Tara Hettstrom, Jodi Colwill, Meghan and Carolyn Pratt, Lauren Genovese and Kristen Reynolds did this past winter in leading the Skippers to their third consecutive South Shore League title.

But even Caitlin can't fathom what she saw in the FleetCenter.

"I thought the stuff they did on the beam was amazing," she said. "They did things I can't do on the floor. When you watch them on T.V., it seems so unreal, but when you're there you realize they are actually doing it."

The day obviously wasn't lost on the bright youngster. She knows what it takes to perform well at her level. But Caitlin wants to up the ante and become that much better. She may not be able to do what Dawes does on the beam, but you can bet Caitlin will give it a try on the mats. And even if she comes remotely close, she'll be looking at some nice scores come next winter.

"It makes me want to do so much better and excel more," Caitlin said.

She also saw firsthand the intense pressure the gymnasts were under to earn a berth and trip to Atlanta.

"You think of them as so perfect," Caitlin said, "but they make mistakes, too."

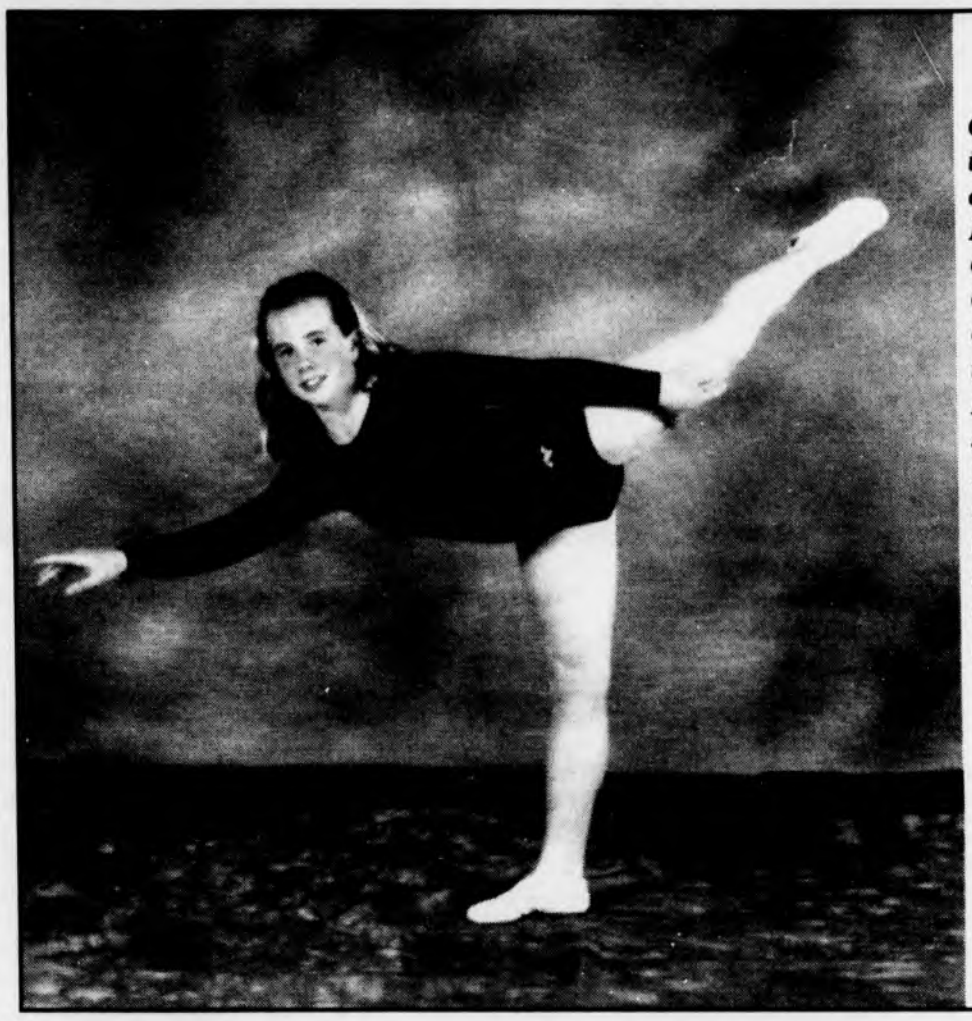
Like Ardizzoni, Caitlin brought home with her a lasting impression of the meet. She saw the joy of the seven-member team as it celebrated its first successful step in the master plan of striking gold down south.

"I remember the looks on their faces," Caitlin said. "I don't think I'll ever forget it."

Just imagine how thrilling it is for a young, impressionable athlete to watch, live, the very personalities she idolizes. A Little Leaguer watching Ken Griffey Jr., from the box seats at Fenway; A youth basketball player sitting courtside as Anfernee Hardaway pushes the ball upcourt against the Celtics; A budding cross-country runner peering for a view of the lead pack of the Boston Marathon jostling for position as it heads down Commonwealth Ave.

"It was exciting just to be there at every event," Ardizzoni said. "I hope it gets the girls excited to get back inside the gym and ready for the next season."

The Cohasset girls have never had serious problems getting motivated to do their best on the mats, beam, vault and bars. Last weekend's competition isn't about to change their minds. Oh, and give Caitlin the key to the community center. She'll probably be the first one there.



Caitlin Flint finished an impressive eighth at the 1996 NEAAU Regional Gymnastics Championships. Caitlin competed in the 12-14 Intermediate division. The talented 12 year old won't soon forget the fun time she had viewing the Olympic Gymnastics Trials at the FleetCenter.

Hingham Shipyard is sold

Cohasset man is new owner

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Paul Trendowicz, the owner of the Cohasset Harbor Marina, has purchased the Hingham Shipyard and Tern Harbor Marina in Weymouth.

Trendowicz said Monday the deal was closed on June 28, and he intends to continue "focus on marine operations" at both locations, while considering development options for the Hingham property.

'It was the right people at the right time.'

— Paul Neelon on his decision to sell.

"This is a long-term investment," he said.

Trendowicz purchased the Cohasset Harbor Marina on Parker Avenue less than two years ago. He lives with his family on Beach Street in Cohasset.

The Hingham Shipyard is comprised of 47 acres, with up to two dozen businesses presently leasing buildings there. Those businesses include an auto body shop, several marine supply stores, a cabinet maker, and a restaurant.

Trendowicz would not disclose the purchase price, but other sources said this week the sale price was "in the vicinity" of $11 million for the Hingham Shipyard and $2 million for Tern Harbor Marina.

According to the Hingham assessors' recent revaluation of real estate, the 47 acres at Hingham Shipyard have an assessed valuation of almost $10.8 million.

Hingham planning administrator Tom Cox said the shipyard is zoned in the industrial district, but the new owner could apply for a "mixed use special permit" which is allowed in that district.

Employing the mixed-use special permit, the shipyard could be developed with a variety of uses: commercial, industrial, and residential, including up to 200 condominiums or a hotel.

Sewer commissioner John Brandt said the entire shipyard is connected to the sewer system, however, any development is likely to require upgrades.

Paul Neelon, who had owned the shipyard for 30 years until last week's sale, said the property had not been "put

August special town meeting could be rerun

Music Circus big top site considered

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

As the Aug. 12 special town meeting shapes up, voters could find themselves with a severe case of déjà vu.

Not only is the March 30 town meeting article approving the proposed $9.9 million new elementary school up for reconsideration but voters may be asked to reconsider the $6 million Strait's Pond sewer project as well.

Both issues drew throngs of supporters at the annual town meeting in March.

In anticipation of a big crowd and hot, humid conditions, the town may hold the special town meeting at the Music Circus because the high school gym is not air conditioned, officials said.

Reconsideration of the sewer project will not affect the tax rate. A $3.16 million override representing half the project's

Cohasset's Week

Correction is noted

The Cohasset Mariner incorrectly reported last week that the warrant for the special town meeting closed on July 12. The warrant closed on July 8. The Mariner regrets any confusion this may have caused.

Aerial bucket to be fixed

Selectmen approved a transfer of $2,800 last week to the wire department for repairs to the 15-year-old aerial bucket truck.

Wire Dept. Supt. Stephen Wigmore said repairs were needed for safety reasons.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown noted that the truck has a lot of uses and repairs are far less costly than buying a new truck.

Contract with Scituate animal shelter approved

Last week, selectmen okay'ed a two-year contract with the Scituate Animal Shelter that charges the town $10 per day per dog and $5 per cat. The fee is collected from the resident if the animal is claimed.

Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said the fees have increased $1 per day but the town has few options.

"It's the only game in town," Doyon said.

Appointments are made

Selectmen recently appointed Robert M. Davenport, 17 Black Horse Lane, to the Government Island Study Committee. They reappointed Joseph D. Buckley, 28 Linden Dr., to the Council on Elder Affairs and Tom Callahan, 35 Norman Todd Rd., and John Bryant, 251 Forest Ave., to the Conservation Commission.

There are still vacancies on the drug & alcohol committee, mosquito control committee and several other town boards. Interested citizens should call the selectmen's office at 383-9900

Shown here with two police bicycles donated by the Konohassett Lodge of Masons are: seasonal police officer Christy Tarantino Jr.; bicycle shop owner Gene Lewis of Hull; patrol officer Rick Yocum; Donald Pratt, master of Konohassett Lodge; Jack MacNeill, senior warden; Police Chief Brian Noonan; Francis Mitchell, past master; and Kenneth Burnside, treasurer. The Masons donated one of the bikes in memory of the late Ronald Beal, past master and secretary of the lodge. Chief Noonan thanked the Masons for their generous donation. He said money is still needed to pay for equipment for bicycle patrol officers. Call 383-1055 for more information.

Long-time employees retire

Selectmen thanked and sent best wishes to Patricia A. Walsh, who is retiring from town hall and William D. McAuliffe, who is retiring from the water department.

Landfill contract awarded

Selectmen awarded the contract for capping the town landfill to the low bidder, C. Spirito Inc. of Hingham which bid $869,760. The highest bid of the five submitted was $1.12 million from G. Conway, Inc. of Charlestown.

The money for the project will come from $1.3 million in appropriations approved at two separate town meetings several years ago.

Engineers with Camp, Dresser & McKee, Inc. (CDM), who recommended C. Spirito, contacted client references provided by the company; bank references; and reviewed whether bid items were balanced. CDM is the consulting engineer on the project.

To cap the dump, Cohasset will use a 1/4 in.-thick membrane over a sand layer. The membrane will be topped with another sand layer and top soil.

There will not be enough room to build a soccer field at the landfill but selectman Nan Roth suggested a wild-flower meadow at the site.

Construction is expected to start later this month and be completed in October. The landfill closed seven years ago. A recycling/transfer facility is operated there and the town pays to have its trash is hauled to SEMASS in Rochester, Mass.

No clay from the Central Artery will be used. Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said the town did apply for the free clay offered by the state but no contractors showed an interest in bringing it to Cohasset. Doyon also noted a down side to having the clay is that the clay pile would have to be maintained until used.

Landfill contract awarded

Selectmen awarded the contract for capping the town landfill to the low bidder, C. Spirito Inc. of Hingham which bid $869,760. The highest bid of the five submitted was $1.12 million from G. Conway, Inc. of Charlestown.

The money for the project will come from $1.3 million in appropriations approved at two separate town meetings several years ago.

Engineers with Camp, Dresser & McKee, Inc. (CDM), who recommended C. Spirito, contacted client references provided by the company; bank references; and reviewed whether bid items were balanced. CDM is the consulting engineer on the project.

To cap the dump, Cohasset will use a 1/4 in.-thick membrane over a sand layer. The membrane will be topped with another sand layer and top soil.

There will not be enough room to build a soccer field at the landfill but selectman Nan Roth suggested a wild-flower meadow at the site.

Construction is expected to start later this month and be completed in October. The landfill closed seven years ago. A recycling/transfer facility is operated there and the town pays to have its trash is hauled to SEMASS in Rochester, Mass.

No clay from the Central Artery will be used. Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said the town did apply for the free clay offered by the state but no contractors showed an interest in bringing it to Cohasset. Doyon also noted a down side to having the clay is that the clay pile would have to be maintained until used.

Cohasset residents keep function

Couple passes Lantana business to son

Cohasset Mariner

Several years ago, there were two classic cars parked in the lobby of Lantana: a Model T and a DeLorean.

Maurice and Joan Hart, who owned Lantana, promised their seventh and youngest child, Paul, that he could have the DeLorean, which he loved, when he graduated from college.

They weren't exactly true to their word. When they remodeled the function facility they had owned and operated in Randolph for more than 20 years, they moved the cars to their home in Cohasset, where they have lived for 32 years.

It is Paul's now, though. He can drive the car the few short blocks to his home, which is also conveniently located in Cohasset.

As Lantana celebrates its 25th anniversary, Paul Hart, now 32, has bought the business. So as of July 1 Maurice and Joan have taken a well-deserved retirement.

"I'm glad it is staying in the family," said Maurice.

"I hope he learned something from us," he added with a chuckle.

Paul who calls himself a mold of his two parents, is no stranger to the business. He has watched it grow, albeit sometimes with young eyes, from a successful catering company in Dorchester (Hart Brothers) to the Lantana we know today.

Hart Brothers Catering started before Paul was born, over 40 years ago in a Roslindale kitchen where Maurice and Joan opened their own catering company (there is no brother).

It grew to be one of the biggest catering companies in Boston, and they moved to a bigger location in 1960: the old HP Hood milk plant in Dorchester.

"Everyone had Harts for their wedding. You got to have Harts," Paul said, remembering their slogan.

In the late 60s, Paul said, his father noticed that there weren't any function facilities on the South Shore where large groups of people could get together.

So the Harts built Lantana, which has five large functions rooms, the largest one holding 750 people, and several smaller bride, or board, rooms.

Paul credits his parents with picking a great location.

"Randolph was almost out in the boonies 25 years ago. Now it is perfect," he said, mentioning its proximity to Routes 24, 3, and 93.

In 1974 Harts Catering, which Paul's brother Michael has owned since 1989, was brought under the Lantana roof. It is now in Rockland.

Paul started at Lantana at a young age because his parents had no baby-sitters. He was paid in M&Ms and doughnuts.

"I think I first started with garnishes, breaking up parsley and washing it off. Then I moved up to the fruit cup. Big responsibilities," he said. "Most kids were involved in Little League. I was making vanilla balls and desserts."

Although Paul worked at Lantana on and off during the years, it wasn't until he graduated from Boston College (his father's alma mater) that he really became involved.

He started off as an assistant night manager and then became general manager in 1992.

Paul, who majored in business, said he had no plans to take over Lantana until recently.

"I just didn't see my parent's retiring," he said.

For their part, his parents didn't think he was interested.

"He is the last one I thought would take over," said Maurice.

When he became general manager, his parents began traveling a lot. It was then that Paul started asking if they would sell the business to him.

It wasn't quite that simple, Paul said. It took some time.

He added that he learned a lot during his time as manager.

His father, who did all the behind the scenes work, taught him to see a room through the customer's eyes and make sure it was perfect.

expected in the course of a weekend, were also explained, said Paul.

His dad wasn't easy to work with in the beginning.

"He has mellowed to the point that you can talk to the guy," Paul said with a grin.

He added that his father was intimidating because of his wealth of knowledge and experience.

From his mother Paul learned how to run the front office and how to sell banquets.

After many years under his parents' tutelage, Hart is implementing several ideas of his own.

He installed a state-of-the-art computer system, which keeps track of current market trends and is specifically tailored to Lantana's needs.

Paul said he also plans to expand the ballroom so it can accommodate 1000 people by the year 2000.

An obvious difference between the older and younger generation is that Paul works with a management team which helps him make decisions.

His parents worked alone.

"The business was extremely dependent on my parents. They were the entrepreneurs,"said Paul.

One sign of his success is that bookings are up 10 percent and expected to increase.

No matter how "modern" the running of Lantana becomes, it still has the Hart stamp.

"It is in the family blood. It was what our family was meant to do," Paul explained. "On a night off, me and my wife entertain 20 people."

He and his wife, Patricia, are expecting a child whom they hope might want to carry on the tradition, too.

Paul inherited his parents' concern for the community.

"My parents have taught me that community involvement is important," Paul said emphatically.

Lantana has hosted a holiday party for 500 senior citizens for many years, and is also involved with the schools and Little League, as well as charitable organizations such as Easter Seals.

Paul has asked his parents to be on the board of advisors for Lantana and admits he already misses them.

The feeling might not be as strong on his parents' side.

"We are doing things we have never done before, like playing bridge in the afternoon. We've taken up golf," said Maurice.

Students present concert

June 16, music students from Joan Jensen's studio in North Cohasset presented a concert for family and friends at Old Ship Church in Hingham. Included were performances by Jody and Rachel Doyle, Emilie Sullivan (piano) and Sarah Bertovich, Ali Kinchla (piano and singing) and Ron Nichynski (voice) all of Cohasset. There were also four-part renditions of light jazz pieces by a small group of Jensen's more advanced singers and a grand finale, which included all 18 students singing, enhanced by Kristen Fitzpatrick of Hull, tap-dancing the rhythm. Other students came from Hingham, Hull and Scituate.

This was the culmination of a half year's hard work in private and semi-private lessons of piano, voice, music theory and music appreciation. Ms. Jensen, concert artist and educator, maintains a music studio in her home. Information about lessons may be obtained by calling her at (617) 383-2240.

Cohasset man is new owner of shipyard on the market" when he was approached several months ago by Trendowicz. Neelon, also a Cohasset resident, said he will continue his other property management business at his office in Waltham.

"It was the right people at the right time," he said this week of the decision to sell.

Although several proposals for development of the shipyard have been discussed over the years, Neelon said the project never materialized due to a number of factors.

Various public works improvements were needed before any development could begin, Neelon said. The Route 3A railroad bridge had to be demolished, the highway and intersection redesigned, and Shipyard Drive constructed. Those projects were completed by the mid- to late-1980s, but the economic recession that followed precluded development.

With financing difficult to obtain during the last five years, Neelon said, "It was a matter of hanging on until the economy improved."

That improvement has come in the last year, and new development plans were being formed to address the changing real estate market, when buyers approached Neelon about purchasing the property.

Ron Palermo of Modern Continental, a large real estate and construction company, said it had investigated buying the shipyard and the adjacent General Services Administration building. Negotiations had gone on intermittently over a two-year period, and company officials had even consulted with the Hingham planning board earlier this year about development options.

The GSA building is perhaps the largest building in Hingham. Situated behind the Weber Dodge, next to the Bradley Woods neighborhood, the total square feet of the building equals 25 acres. It was purchased in the mid-1980s by PX Realty Trust, which is leasing space to a number of industrial and engineering concerns, including Harris Rebar and a group from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Palermo said Modern Continental wanted to buy both properties, but PX Realty Trust did not want to sell its property.

"One didn't make sense without the other," Palermo said.

Planning board member Peter Bickford agreed, adding that he is "disappointed" that the shipyard sale does not include the GSA building. He noted that the master plan for the shipyard anticipated that the GSA property would be part of the entire development project.

The key to development of the shipyard is ownership of the entire area, he said.

"Otherwise, it will have to be done piecemeal."

Bickford said he hopes to see "a creative development—not a concrete mausoleum," that provides "a fair mix of recreational and residential uses," with commercial uses that maintain public access.

"I'm willing to work with any developer that wants to do something to enhance that area," he said. "I just don't see how anyone can do that without the GSA building."

In addition to PX Realty Trust, the state Department of Environmental Management and the MBTA own approximately 13 acres which were taken by eminent domain. DEM took seven acres in 1981 for commuter boat parking, docking, and the ticket office. In 1992, the MBTA took another six acres to expand the available parking. This land remains under state ownership.

History behind the shipyard

The property that came to be known as the Hingham Shipyard was originally owned in the early 1900s by Peter Bradley, which used the site for a polo field, stables, greenhouses and a private airport. To mark Hingham's tercentenary in 1935, more than 1,200 people attended a three-day celebration at the Bradley Estate.

Mindful of the war in Europe, the United States Navy encouraged Bethlehem Steel to construct a new shipyard. With its deep water harbor, proximity to railroad, and available manpower, Bethlehem Steel chose Hewitt's Cove at the Bradley Estate where destroyer-escorts would be built, as an annex to its Fore River Shipyard in Quincy.

In 1942, the property was seized for the war effort, paying the Bradley family $174,772 for 123 acres. The first ship was launched from the Bethlehem-Hingham Shipyard in September of that year.

By October, 1942, the shipyard employed 10,000 workers.

When World War II ended, the shipyard was turned over the Navy, which offered it for sale to the town. The property was then valued at $26.5 million. Hingham turned down its option to buy the shipyard, which was turned over to the General Services Administration.

The GSA sold the shipyard to the Grossman Lumber Company in 1961 for $553,000, but retained 35 acres, including the cavernous GSA building.

In 1966, Paul Neelon, in the name of Bear Hill Investment Corporation, bought the Hingham Shipyard, and began rebuilding the waterfront for Hewitt's Cove Marina. Those piers were destroyed during the Blizzard of 1978, and rebuilt with a state loan with slips for 350 ships.

An attempt to rezone the property to allow construction of high-rise apartments failed at town meeting in 1972. In 1983, town meeting unanimously approved the mixed-use special permit for the shipyard.

At various points between 1970 to 1987, the Hingham Shipyard was the subject of a variety of studies and "master plans" by Hingham, the shipyard owners, the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, and land-use and design students from Harvard.

cost was defeated at the May 4 special election.

But overturning the school article will effectively nullify the successful $9.9 million April 6 override, which authorized the town to pay for that project.

And in both cases, state money hangs in the balance. Sewer and school officials worry loss of state subsidy if the projects don't move forward.

The school project is on the list for 60 percent state reimbursement and nearly 50 percent of the cost of Straits Pond sewer project will be 75 percent funded by the state.

Ted Guild, chairman of the sewer commission, is used to wrangling with the state.

But after the town and state reached a settlement in 1994 to resolve Cohasset's sewer problems which have plagued the town for 20 years, Guild hoped things would move ahead more smoothly.

"It's extremely frustrating," he said about the article submitted by some North Cohasset residents.

Monday, Maria Plante of Jerusalem Road submitted a citizens' petition with 156 signatures asking that the sewer project be reconsidered.

As it stands now, the 345 homeowners in North Cohasset will pay for the sewer project with no subsidy from the town. The same people are facing 155 percent increases in their water bills to pay for a new water plant and upgrades to that system. North Cohasset is on Hingham water. That increase is being appealed by the towns of Hingham and Hull (see related story).

Plante said the entire town sewer undertaking should be handled as one.

"We want this addressed as a total municipal project," she said.

But the entire town is being addressed in the wastewater improvement plan with improvements tackled in phases. Strait's Pond, which is an Area of Critical Environmental Concern, is slated to go first.

"What's at stake (if the sewer article is overturned) is if we stop spending money and halt the project, we'll be in violation of the agreement for judgement," Guild said.

"The state will take whatever measures it deems appropriate to put us back to work."

The town could face fines of up to $10,000 a day for failing to comply with the agreement with the state.

After the May 4 override was defeated, North Cohasset citizens said they planned to join forces with their counterparts in the 400-430 homes in the central Cohasset area to bring a similar 50/50, user/town shared payment plan before the voters.

Plante said the group may still do that and withdraw the Aug. 12 article if Guild can convince them the $6.6 million central Cohasset sewer project will proceed as planned.

The sewer commission will meet at 7:30 p.m. tonight (July 11) at the Second Congregational Church next to town hall to discuss the project.

Guild said the central Cohasset project has been delayed a few months because some additional environmental testing has been required but every effort would be made to bring it before the October town meeting for approval.

"We intend to bring the Central Cohasset project to special town meeting and then give North Cohasset another crack at an override," he said.

This week, another article was submitted to selectmen regarding the school. Sources said some abutters are behind the article which asks for certain performance criteria for the school relating to siting concerns such as detention ponds, fire lane, retaining walls, and parking.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown, who was "faxed" the article and brought it to town hall, said selectmen would discuss whether or not to accept the article at their meeting on Monday.

Citizen petition articles with 100 or more signatures must be accepted if in by the warrant closing deadline but other articles are included at the selectmen's discretion.

Another article asking for funding for the next town history was also submitted before the warrant closed.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

A MORE SALABLE PACKAGE

QUESTION: How can you make a house more attractive to a buyer without major improvements?

ANSWER: First impressions count! Replace loose tiles, bricks or shingles. If the paint is peeling, get out the brush. Peeling paint is a primary offender.

Inside, if the walls and woodwork are dirty, wash them. If marred, repaint where needed. Fix any leaking faucets, loose door knobs, creaking floors. Clear clutter out of closets and basement. Pay special attention to the bathrooms and kitchen. Make them spotless. No dirty dishes in the sink. Nothing makes a better impression than a home with a well cared-for look.

Hingham, Hull to appeal water rate hike

Cohasset plans no action

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

While North Cohasset residents continue to oppose the Massachusetts-American Water Company rate hike through an aggressive letter-writing campaign, town officials say Cohasset has no plans to launch an appeal.

"At this point we don't anticipate any further action by the town," said Town Administrator Greg Doyon, who noted that the town could be limited on what it can do legally as it missed the deadline to be an intervener and served as only a limited participant in the recent rate hearings before the state Department of Public Utilities (DPU).

Many water company customers have already received bills reflecting the new, higher rates which went into effect June 1. While the latest bills reflect only a small portion of the large rate increase to come, Mass-American customers can expect to see their average annual water bills increase from $250 to $650.

Neighboring Hingham and Hull which are also served by the private water company filed a joint appeal in Supreme Judicial Court this week.

Officials in both towns hope that by reopening and reviewing the rate case, the DPU's decision, which allowed a more than 150 percent water rate hike, will be overturned in court and customers will receive a lower, more equitable rate increase.

Much of the increase approved will cover the construction and operation costs of Mass-American's new $39.5 water treatment facility located off Main Street in Hingham.

In their appeal, Hingham and Hull argue that the costs to construct the plant are excessive as compared to similar projects in other communities. The two towns also take issue with the high rate of return allowed for the project (Mass-American requested 14 percent return on the investment, the DPU allowed 13 percent) and the fact that the project was offered to only one bidder, eliminating the possibility of more competitive bids and the likelihood of lower construction costs.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen will set aside 10 minutes at 8 p.m. on their meeting nights to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda, selectmen said.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

More birthdays, babies and grads this week!

We begin by sending two very special ladies belated birthday greetings — Kim Litchfield, whose birthday was Monday, July 8, and Anita Bernstein, whose birthday was Tuesday, July 9. Hope both of you had the best celebrations ever, and that there will be many more for both of you!

The University of Chicago awarded a bachelor of arts degree in biological sciences to John Kisiel, son of Jack and Kathy Kisiel of Pond Street, at a June 8 ceremony in Rockefeller Memorial Chapel on the University of Chicago campus.

While at the University of Chicago, John, a 1992 CHS grad, was a member of the crew team, member of the band "Grip Tongue" and was involved in musical drama. He plans to work as a research assistant at the University of Chicago hospitals before doing graduate work in the biological sciences.

We are ever-so-proud of Alison Welz, daughter of Bryan and Eloise Welz, a member of the Class of 1996 at Skidmore. She earned honors during the spring semester.

Colby College, Waterville, Maine, announced Rebecca L. Golden was named to the dean's list for outstanding academic achievement during the second semester of the 1995-'96 academic year. Becky, daughter of Steven and Amy Golden, is a member of the Class of 1998, majoring in international studies.

Colby College also sent us word of another Cohasset student, Laurie B. Bronstein. Laurie, a member of the Class of 1996, majored in sociology. She is the daughter of Barry and Judith Bronstein.

Junior Brett MacQuarrie, son of Jane and Chris Kyricos, earned academic honors for the spring term at Northfield Mount Hermon School, an independent, coeducational college-preparatory school in Northfield. A student leader and member of the varsity lacrosse and soccer teams, he served as co-captain of the Southeast Team in the 1995 Bay State Games. He also has been a member of the NMH "As Schools Match Wits" academic TV quiz show team.

Here is an inspiring story if we ever heard one! Angela Parisi, daughter of Bruce and Georgine Butman, has been chosen to receive the Merit Achievement Award in recognition of having her achievements published in "Who's Who Among American High School Students." Angela is a student who chose to attend South Shore Vo-Tech to study electrical engineering and will very probably be one of our nation's leaders someday!

Hat's off to Carole J. Smith on her graduation from Williams College.

She has received the Youth Recognition Certificate from the U.S. Army; Certificate of Achievement from the Secretary of Defense, William Perry; and the Certificate of Achievement from the National Aeronautics and Space: Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center, from Kathryn Thornton, NASA astronaut. Angela's family is very proud to have such a goal-reacher in their family! And isn't it nice to know that with all the crime and corruption we hear about among our youth, we do have kids who reach for the stars! We are all proud of you, too, Angela!

Speaking of wonderful news, John and Joan Conte have some to share. His name is John Carmelo Conte III, born June 13 at 1:24 p.m. at South Shore Hospital. He weighed seven pounds, one ounce. His siblings are Mike and Bill Kearney, and Jenna Conte, Caitlin and Kerin Kearney. Maternal grandparents are Joan and Bill Higgins of Hull, and his paternal grandparents are Barbara and Carmelo Conte of Cohasset. Our congratulations to all of you!

Carole J. Smith, daughter of Peter and Mary Ellen Smith of Cohasset, received a BA degree from Williams College at its 207th commencement exercises June 2. The commencement address was delivered by George Bush, 41st President of the United States. Carole majored in biology and graduated cum laude.

Her activities included serving as a teaching assistant, on the college council, rugby, yearbook staff; Gull editor, peer health counseling and crew. What a busy lady! Congrats go out to you, Carole, along with best wishes for a great life in the business world!

A gala celebration was held Sunday, June 23, at the Commandant's House, Charlestown Navy Yard, to honor the retirement of Henry Dormitzer, longtime Cohasset resident and president of the New England historic seaport. Henry founded the seaport more than 20 years ago, and is responsible for building the Spirit of Massachusetts, a 125-foot, two-masted schooner and sailing school ship renowned for its beautiful appearance.

Spirit sails year-round, traveling the Eastern Seaboard from Nova Scotia to the Gulf of Mexico and into the Caribbean for the winter months.

Henry also bought the Tall Ships to Boston in 1976, 1980 and 1984. In addition to family and friends from afar, Cohasset guests at the retirement party were Rod and Marilyn Hobson, Deborah Trachtenberg and Carol Bonnar.

The Dormitzers are also celebrating their 63rd wedding anniversary. Congratulations and smooth sailing to Henry and Julia Dormitzer!

EDITORIAL

A second chance for a responsible decision

To those of you who are on the fence about the proposed new elementary school, the weeks ahead will provide the opportunity to get the facts you need to make a reasoned decision.

There's a month before the August 12 Special Town Meeting where voters will again have the opportunity to decide whether the project should move forward.

And while there has been a plethora of meetings and news articles on the subject over the past year — we're now back at the starting gate.

Sadly, a project that should be looked forward to with great expectation for the future of the town's children has divided Cohasset.

In an unprecedented move to rescind a town meeting action that was contingent on a successful override vote — a group of angry citizens has organized to stop the project. A simple majority at the special town meeting in support of overturning the annual town meeting vote will be able to send the school project back to the drawing board.

As voters, the responsibility now falls on each and every one of us to separate anti-tax rhetoric from legitimate concerns about the project itself.

Don't be fooled into thinking that the town doesn't need a new school, it does.

The questions that now remain are: when, where and at what cost? The school building committee and school committee have answered these questions ad nauseam. Can you accept what they have proposed? If you have questions over the site, the design, how the funding mechanism works, the impact on your tax bill — then by all means call a committee member or attend a meeting and ask.

There is a lot at stake, not the least of which is the possible loss of millions of dollars in state reimbursement for the project.

So like it or not, Aug. 12 will provide another chance to vote on the school. Please mark your calendars and come to listen.

We hope the North Cohasset homeowners who decided to bring their sewer project before the voters for reconsideration in August will change their minds. They will lose nothing by waiting until the October special town meeting — and a lot might be gained. By that time the central Cohasset sewer project could be ready for approval and both groups could work together for an override to share the projects' cost with the town.

The August special town meeting should be allowed to focus on the school.

— Mary Ford

Support for new school urged

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

It is time to begin to set the record straight in the fight for a new school for Cohasset's youngest children.

Representing the proponents of a new school are the School Committee (unanimous), the School Facilities Committee (unanimous), the Board of Selectmen (unanimous), and the Advisory Committee (overwhelming majority). Representing the opponents of a new school are a very small group of people whom I shall call The Vocal Minority. I shall confine my observations in this letter to two of these groups: the School Committee (of which I am chairman) and The Vocal Minority.

My colleagues and I on the School Committee have absolutely nothing to gain from our support of the new school. None of us has a child who will benefit from this project. All of us will see our property taxes rise at the same rate as everyone else in the town. None of us is in any way connected with the building trades industry, so none of us will benefit financially from the project.

So ask yourself: why is it that we favor a new school? The answer is simple: because it's the right thing to do. Cohasset's youngest children are being educated now in a woefully inadequate physical facility that would be unacceptable in most urban areas of America. There is no cafeteria. There is no gymnasium to speak of, only a play area that doubles as storage space. Classrooms are far below minimum standards, both in size and adequacy of storage and other spaces. The building is not accessible to persons with physical disabilities. The library and the computer lab, such as they are, are squeezed into the basement. Most of the mechanical and electrical systems do not meet current codes.

Now ask yourself: what motivates The Vocal Minority? One member, who also serves on the Advisory Committee, stated in writing in two local newspapers that the School Committee would not seek state funding, thereby sticking the residents of the town with an additional 60 percent cost for the project. Was this a fabrication? a scare tactic? That same member of The Vocal Minority also stated that the 60% state reimbursement was simply our own state taxes being returned to us. There are about 5,000 taxpayers in Cohasset. There are millions of taxpayers statewide. Does anyone really believe that it is "our state taxes" coming back to us? Was this a fabrication? A scare tactic?

Another member of The Vocal Minority was rebuked by the Local Affairs Committee at the state house recently when she was unable to produce a shred of evidence that the outcome of the override election was in any way affected by failure to post a notice. Of course, failure to post a notice is a serious problem, one which I'm certain the selectmen will correct. But virtually no one, as this member was forced to admit, reads those notices anyway! Was this a fabrication? a scare tactic?

A third member of The Vocal Minority demanded repeatedly at Town Meeting, in the very few School Facilities Committee meetings he attended and in writing that $1 million dollars should be cut from the project, but that the new school should be air conditioned, thereby adding back most of those savings. Am I missing something here?

It is clear that The Vocal Minority will say anything, grasp at any straw to defeat the new school. Why? What do they stand to gain from its defeat?

Most importantly: who speaks for the children of Cohasset? Who is looking out for the 5- and 6- and 7-year-olds who every day, 180 days a year, are forced to spend more than five hours of their lives in one of the oldest, most inadequate school buildings in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in one of the most affluent towns in the state?

I submit to you that it is time for the people of Cohasset to do the right thing. Attend Town Meeting Aug. 12. Don't let The Vocal Minority speak for you. Give our children what they deserve: an adequate physical plant to go along with the excellent teaching and caring they already receive from the Cohasset Public Schools.

Reader outraged at two selectmen

To the Editor:

I attended a selectmen's meeting Monday, July 1, fearful that the taxpayers group of which I am a member would be treated like pariahs, which is what happened at the disruptive and thoroughly unpleasant town meeting of March 31 and April 1.

What I experienced was an appalling lack of knowledge on the part of two selectpersons.

The list of 500 citizens' names presented to call for a special town meeting was received by a few selectpeople as if it were a letter bomb. Voting against the petition was not an option of the board.

We are in the midst of a taxpayers' revolution, repeated in hundreds of towns throughout the commonwealth and the country. Responsibility in government and prudence in fiscal matters is the watchword.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Putting off debt for a questionable future is not in our budgets.

The "old" people who "cannot attend a meeting because it is too hot in August," as Ms. McMorris claims, are in fact the signers of the petition and are willing to schedule it in the Mojave Desert if it would protect the fixed incomes so carefully nurtured most of their lives.

Mrs. McMorris accused the taxpayers of having adopted an immoral stance. I ask her — how moral is it of citizens to build a school in the middle of wetlands, with one access road, and with deep-detaining pools that place the school children in jeopardy?

The taxpayers' intent is to protect our children and avoid town indebtedness well into the next century.

A school, yes. That particular school, no.

Our taxpayers' group represents 10 percent of the voting population of Cohasset, and many more people who have finally been alerted to the secretive and sloppy planning on the part of those responsible for the school plans — presented and revised many times — and still dangerous and unacceptable.

In the spirit of cooperation and nonpartisanship, let us suggest that all those responsible for the government of Cohasset begin to act in the interests of the entire population, not just of a few vested interests. Only then will we praise ourselves for the choices we make in our town elections.

School board backs school site

To the Editor:

Much of the recent discussion in your newspaper regarding Cohasset's new elementary school has focused on the site chosen for this project. The School Committee strongly endorses the School Facilities Committee in its selection of this site and in the thoroughness of their site selection process.

The location of the new school was chosen after careful review of a number of sites in Cohasset. Information about and a listing of those sites is available to the public in the Sept. 19, 1995, report by Earl R. Flansburgh and Associates, Inc., titled The Cohasset Public Schools, which is available at the Superintendent's office. In the course of the site selection process, input was solicited from the Housing Authority, the Cemetery Study Committee, the Advisory Committee and the Conservation Commission. Sites were evaluated based on the following criteria:

Cost: the need to be fiscally responsible.

Size: a contiguous parcel of 15 to 20 acres.

Access: ability to access the property easily.

Of the many sites reviewed, only one, the town-owned land behind the Deer Hill School, met all of those criteria. This parcel of land was purchased by the Town in 1969 for the sum of $135,000; it was bought specifically for the purpose for which it will now be used. Thus, selection of this site did not add to the cost of the project. Size and accessibility are both more than adequate. Further, locating the new school near the existing Deer Hill facility creates a campus atmosphere, which is desirable from an educational standpoint.

As with any major construction project, several issues have arisen with respect to this site. The School Facilities Committee, in concert with the Conservation Commission and the Design Review Board, is addressing, and will continue to resolve, these issues. It is clear to us that the chosen site is indeed the best location for Cohasset's new elementary school.

SAFE wins 'crabgrass' award for organizing to protect environment

SAFE won the annual "Crabgrass" award from Clean Water Action for the best organizing to protect the environment. SAFE, Stop Any Further Expansion, the five-year-old Cohasset environmental group, won the award for its successful efforts to stop the proposed Area 5 expansion of the private Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill.

"We had stiff competition for this award," said SAFE vice-president John K. McNabb Jr., who accepted the award for the group at the Clean Water Action awards ceremony June 11. "But, other successful environmental activists from across Massachusetts recognized that we have been very successful in educating the people of Cohasset and preparing them to take effective action."

SAFE won the "Crabgrass" award for its steady organizing of the people of Cohasset, which resulted in an ever-increasing number of people in Cohasset who have written a letter or taken other action to stop the expansion, from about 18 in 1991 to more than 800 today.

"Clean Water Action," said McNabb, "was particularly impressed with the fact that 150 people signed up with 10-citizen groups to intervene in the Site Assignment Hearings and that 267 people signed up to participate in the hearings."

SAFE was awarded a copy of a book, "For Earth's Sake, The Life and Times of David Brower," by David Brower, which SAFE will donate to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Clean Water Action is a statewide alliance of local environmental groups like SAFE.

Dragging depletes lobster stocks

To the Editor:

As a lobsterman, I was very interested in your article "Local lobstermen are opposed to dragging for lobsters," (June 20). However, the article was very one-sided by frequently quoting supporters of draggermen and ignoring all the work my state senator, Bob Hedlund, and others, have done on behalf of lobstermen.

Dragging for lobsters kills many, many lobsters in the process. Soft shell lobsters and immature lobsters cannot stand being dragged over cobble rocks for long distances. If the state allows draggermen to land lobsters, then whatever the limit or daily catch is will be just a portion of the lobsters lost to draggers.

Lobstermen understand that some lobsters are going to be caught by draggers. But we should keep the allowable catch low, very low. Otherwise, some draggermen may go after lobsters when they cannot find any groundfish, even though they have already fished them to near extinction. Draggers are already targeting lobsters as evidenced by comments in the article. Once the stricter bans on groundfish go into effect, we can only guarantee that more draggers will set their sights on a greater amount of lobsters.

The long-term health of the lobster stocks and preserving the future value of one of the state's most valuable resources are the reasons why the Mass. Lobstermen's Association, along with sympathetic legislators like Sen. Bob Hedlund and Sen. Bob Durand, are fighting to prevent draggermen from unintentionally, or intentionally contributing to the depleting of lobster stocks.

Sailing Club Lobsterfest

The Cohasset Sailing Club is sponsoring its annual clambake for members and their guests from 7 p.m. to midnight Saturday, July 20. (This event is scheduled in July this year as the Sail Club is co-hosting the Mass. Bay Junior Sailing Regatta in August — 300 kids to race!)

Cohasset's Dan Anderson will provide the clambake, and DJ With Class will be there for music and dancing.

The menu includes New England clam chowder with oyster crackers, steamers with drawn butter, native corn on the cob, sweet sausage, coleslaw, assorted rolls, chilled watermelon, and a choice of a select steamed lobster (1-1/4 lb.) or a 12 oz. sirloin steak. The cost is $26 per person and participants should bring their own beverages. This event will be held under the tents as usual, rain or shine. Casual attire.

Tickets must be paid for no later than Thursday, July 18. Payment may be brought to the sailing club and given to the instructor in the office (there will be a designated box on the desk to put your checks) or dropped off to the front step mail box of Lyn Previte, 38 Summer Street. Checks MUST indicate the number of steak or lobster dinners desired. For questions or information, call Lyn at 383-9723.

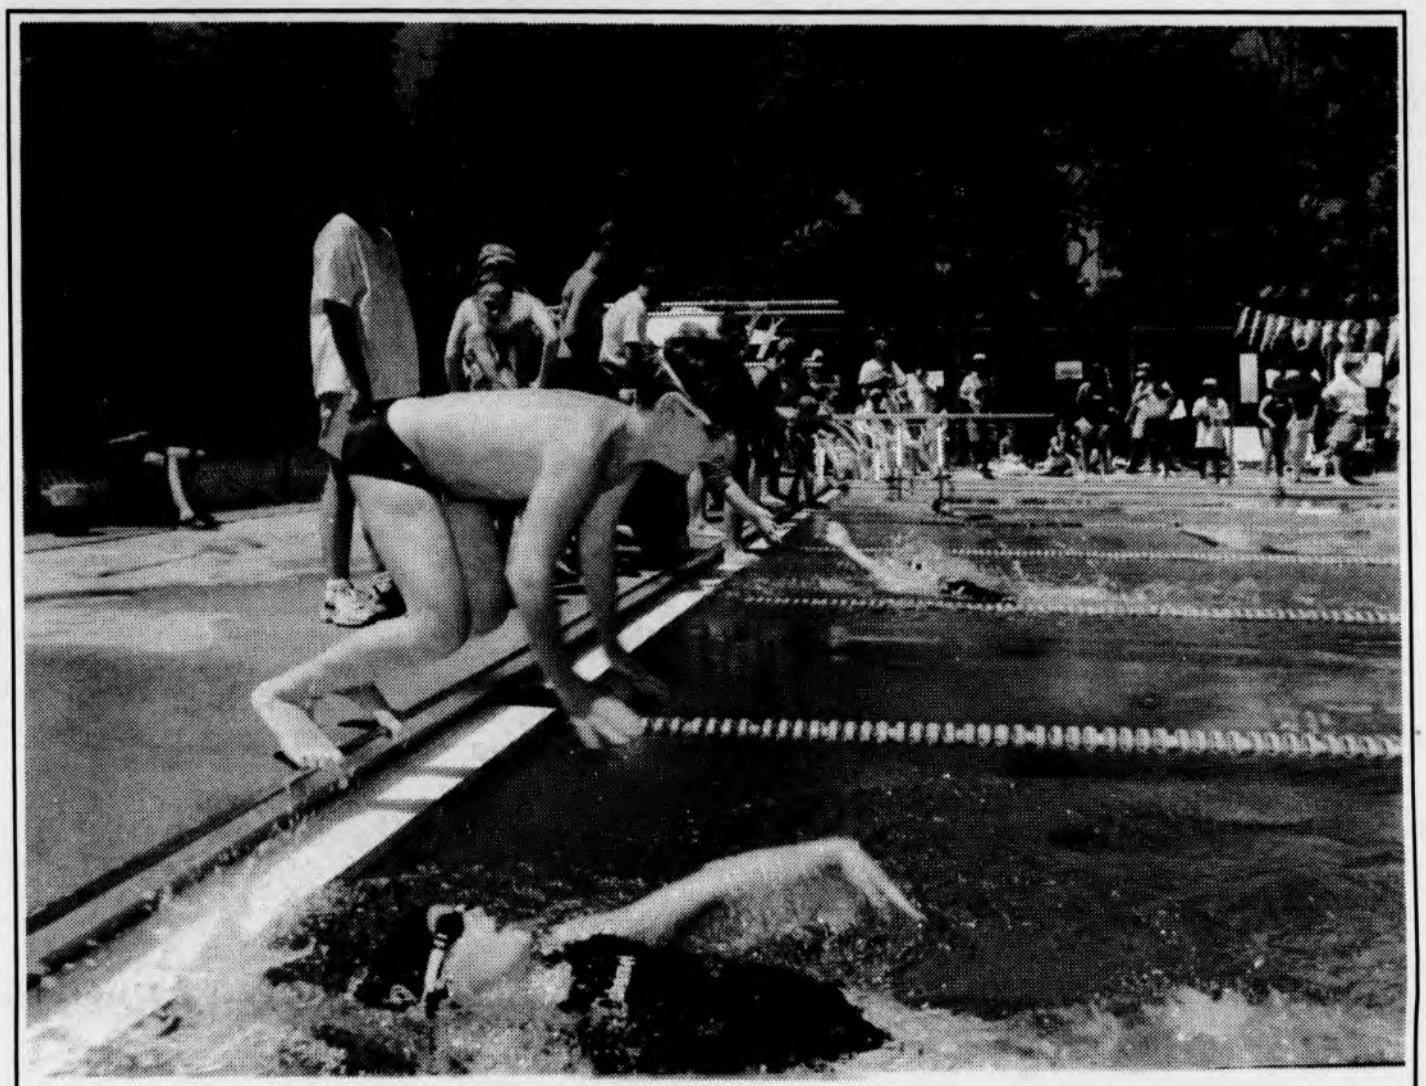
Swimmers swamp Hanover

Season-opening win sets stage for Scituate meet



Cohasset's Tommy Anderson takes off for the second leg of the medley relay in last Friday's South Shore Swim League season-opening victory over Hanover.

The Cohasset Swim Center team couldn't have asked for a better start to its South Shore Swim League season than last Friday's overwhelming win over the Hanover YMCA club.

There's power in numbers and Cohasset had just that as all 130 swimmers contributed to the victory.

"Allison (Hughes) and I were both very happy," said head coach Becky Golden. "It was a great start to the season.

"What was so outstanding was that we had 130 swimmers out there and they were able to add something to the meet."

Cohasset had strong performances in all of its age groups. In fact, there wasn't a single event where the swimmers didn't shine.

Melissa Crowley Buck, Cally Ernst, Emile Shea and Parker Berg led a clean sweep in the mixed 8-and-under medley relay. Cohasset won the 10-and-under mixed medley relay as well with the squad of Nicole Plante, Yasmine Afshar, Becca Lehr and Teddie Straughn.

Cohasset also took the medley relay in the boys and girls divisions in every age group through the 17-and-under category.

In the individual races, Mike Ernst, Derek Bugley, Chris Golden and Parker Berg were just a few who sped to victory on the boys side, while Ali Dempster, Sarah Case, Allison Berg, Kate O'Brien, Alexis Bugley and Ernst swam to wins. Also finishing in first place in their respective events for Cohasset were Rob Lehr, Terry Hurley, Justin Buckley, Bryan Bilton, Kerry O'Hart, Lisa Musto, David Ingler, Matt Farley, Derek Bugley, Zach Markert, Courtney McDonald, Sarah Harknesst Afshar and Elizabeth Ingber to name a few.

Golden said Friday's meet at the Scituate Yacht Club should prove to be more of an even competition than the Hanover match-up.

"I expect it to be one of the closest meets of the summer," said Golden. "It's definitely going to be a harder one for us. Scituate only has four lanes so we won't be able to show off our (team) depth."

Cohasset may not be able to "show off" its deep squad, but you can bet it will be plenty ready to pick up where it left off from the first meet.

EXTRA POINTS/Joe Reardon

Time for adults to grab the coffee can

Your palms get sweaty as you near the entrance to Super Stop & Shop.

You reach into your pockets and fumble for some loose change, anything so you can come out of this particular predicament without feeling like Ebeneezer Scrooge.

You think back quickly in your mind to the charities you have made donations to over the year and the money you put into the collection box at church every week.

But this is different. Unlike the envelopes you put a check in and mail away without seeing the people you are donating to, The Collector stands just a few feet away as you near the door, dressed in his game uniform.

You take what you have in your pocket and slide it through the slit cut out of the plastic cover of the coffee can.

Bless you sir. See you on the way out.

It's that time of year again when Little League baseball travels out of New England to locations across the country and we're expected to dig down into our pockets and pay for the two-way plane ticket.

The Ken Griffey Jrs., and Roger Clemens of tomorrow are suddenly the meek of the earth for a few weekends. Give them a cockney accent and you'd swear Oliver Twist and his lads were in town.

Reardon

I haven't played baseball since the eighth grade, but over the last six years I've stuffed enough dollar bills and odd change into enough cans to buy my own minor league team.

Call me an ogre, but I'm tired of paying a toll just to get into supermarkets. And for what? So some kids can go spend a week playing baseball in Oklahoma, Texas or God knows where.

Don't get me wrong. I think baseball's the epitome of American sports and a great game for kids. But I have a big problem when parents, coaches and the rest of the crowd turn the youngsters from the Boys of Summer into panhandlers.

A cynical attitude on my part? Maybe. But before you call me a cynic answer me this question. Why aren't the parents putting money away for a rainy day, in this case, sending their sons and daughters on a trip to play ball against the best in the country?

You have to admit, the adults are onto something here. But why stop with Little League and the rest of the youth sports. This is the United States after all, free enterprise is what made this country great. I want a piece of the American dream too. I'm going to grab a coffee can this afternoon and hit the supermarket circuit myself. By Monday I should have enough for a new antenna for my car and a pair of hub caps.

Now that I think of it there's a trip to Bermuda I've had my mind set on for quite a while now. This one will take some serious cash, so you can expect to see me around the South Shore for a few months. Remember, when you do see me outside CVS, Super Stop & Shop and Dunkin Donuts have a heart. I have to go on this trip. That's all there is to it. You have your baseball diamonds, I have the white, sandy beaches of Nassau on my mind.

Then again, maybe I'll bring my story to the local businesses around town. I'm sure the various stores in Cohasset Village have enough loose change lying around to get me that much closer to paradise.

But I can't forget the expenses. Sure, I can collect enough from an afternoon working the Hanover Mall to pay for my plane ticket. Once I get to Bermuda, however, I have to have some spending money for postcards to send to those friendly businesses that paid for my vacation. Plus I have to buy T-shirts for the relatives.

The more I think about it though, the closer I'm coming to actually taking some initiative. How about an all-you-can-eat spaghetti dinner? Charge $5 a head and let the masses have a pastafest. Doubt it won't work? It did the trick in sending a teammate of mine to the National Junior Olympic Cross-Country Championships in Cheyenne, Wyoming back in 1978. And what's more you got something in return.

Still, I'm pretty much a softie when it comes to aspiring baseball players collecting money in the hot sun. So guys, and gals, don't worry. You'll get what I can spare.

But mom and dad, shame on the both of you. While your kids are in the hot sun you call us to put in a blurb for donations. Well don't call me. You're wasting your breath. Go grab a coffee can and join your kids.

Yacht and sailing clubs to host junior championships

This will be an exciting August on the water when the Mass Bay Sailing 1996 BayBank Junior Championships are co-hosted by the Cohasset Yacht Club and the Cohasset Sailing Club. This big event is expected to draw more than 300 junior sailors, ages seven through high school, from the Boston, North Shore and South Shore areas.

The participants will launch from Cohasset Harbor and proceed to designated areas. There will be class events for Optimists, Turnabouts, Lasers and Club 420's during the three days of stiff competitive racing on the bay. The hosts will conduct green fleet races as well.

In addition to the wonderful sailing during this regatta, the hosts have planned many social events to make the guests and their parents, instructors, and the whole planning force feel welcome. There will be a pizza party, cookout, a dance party for the sailors, a cocktail party Tuesday evening for the adults at Bancroft Hall above the harbor; and morning snacks and lunches will be provided on race days. Many families of local Cohasset sailors will help out by opening their homes to wayward sailors from north of Boston who need a place to stay during the regatta.

Mark your calendars and set aside August 13 through 15 for the BayBank Junior Championships outside of Cohasset Harbor, where the sailing promises to be fast and exciting on open bay waters, and the social gatherings hosted by the Cohasset Yacht Club and the Cohasset Sailing Club will be just as memorable and fun.

Cohasset Business

Cohasset is a coffee lovers' town

Drive-throughs keep 'caffeinated' commuters moving

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

With Dunkin Donuts, Quikava and Marylou's News conveniently located on Route 3A and all within a stone's throw of each other, Cohasseters have learned a whole new meaning to the phrase "wake up and smell the coffee."

Not only do these coffee shops offer commuters their daily caffeine fix, but all three offer convenient drive-through service which has helped boost business and keep the morning rush hour rushing.

Bright pink Marylou's News which boasts "the best coffee in town," opened its drive-through window last Monday, just five months after Dunkin Donuts at Cohasset Plaza did the same and less than a year after Quikava set up shop behind Paul Vercollone's Mobil station on King Street.

But despite the copious coffee shops and close-by competition, none of the participants in the on-going Cohasset java war seem concerned.

There's enough coffee business for everyone, said Quikava Manager John Brewster, who noted that commuters have several choices and go where they want to go on a particular day.

"We fill up a lot of Dunkin Donuts coffee mugs with our coffees," Brewster noted.

Specialty drinks and coffees like cappuccino, espresso and cafe latte set Quikava apart from its coffee cohorts as do extended hours which keeps the window jumping nearly 24 hours per day.

"It helps out the community to have a place to get a coffee all day and practically all night," Brewster said.

For hungry commuters Quikava offers bagels, biscotti, sandwiches and muffins and despite the nearby competition, Brewster says business is booming. And its connection to the gas station has been mutually beneficial as commuters often choose to fill up their gas tanks along with their coffee cups.

Dunkin Donuts owner John Bellas, who has operated the shop in Cohasset Plaza for seven years and another in Cushing Plaza for 16 years, says the newer competition in town hasn't cut into his business at all.

"Dunkin Donuts customers are Dunkin Donuts customers," said Bellas, who estimates that since opening his drive-through window at the Cohasset Plaza store in February, business has picked up nearly 40 percent. Bellas said he's also added bagels to the Dunkin Donuts menu helping it better compete with the Atlantic Bagel and Coffee Company which coincidentally is also right up the road.

Marylou's News owner Mary Lou Sandry, who has opened 10 South Shore shops in her 10 years in business, said the Cohasset store continues to be one of the busiest.

The drive-through window has brought in new business and new faces, said manager Lisa Morris, who maintains that the "regulars" like to come in to the store and see Marylou's employees' friendly faces.

"They come back again for the good service," Morris noted.

While helping it compete with Dunkin Donuts and Quikava, Morris said the drive through was opened primarily for the customers' convenience.

"It's a sign of the times," said Sandry. "Mothers like to drive through rather than having to take their children out of the car seats and commuters prefer to stay inside a cool car during the hot summer months."

In addition to coffees, juice, muffins, bagels, soft drinks and cigarettes, Marylou's offers customers a chance to try their luck with full-service lottery.

"We have all the staples you need to get your motor running in the morning," Sandry said. The lottery contributes a lot to the business and also sets Marylou's apart from other quick coffee stops. A new espresso machine planned for the Cohasset store could convert even the most staunch Quikava devotees, and Sandry notes that the shop's new sitting room will give people on the go a place savor their cappuccinos.

"Most people like to sit and fondle their cappuccino. It's pretty to look at too," said Sandry who noted either is hard to do when your racing down the highway at 90 miles per hour.

Like her competition, Sandry too feels there is enough customers and coffee to go around in Cohasset.

Route 3A break-ins under investigation

Police are investigating three break-ins in Route 3A businesses that were discovered early Monday morning.

Det. Rick Grassie said a total of about $1250 was stolen from Chief Justice Cushing Highway shops Atlantic Bagel, Hancock Paint and the Good Sport, which are adjacent to one another in the small, Route 3A shopping area.

Grassie said police found a hole cut through the sidewall between Hancock Paint and Atlantic Bagel and believe the thief or thieves entered through a rear, second-floor window in Hancock Paint and then cut their way into the bagel shop. They broke through an outside wall into Good Sport, Grassie said.

Police said the Bureau of Criminal Investigation (BCI) has dusted for fingerprints and secured the evidence for Cohasset police, Grassie said.

The burglaries, which police think occurred after hours on Sunday evening, are the first breaking and entering in a commercial building in Cohasset in quite some time, Grassie said.

Village stop not ruled out

Station would help revitalize downtown

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

Many residents, business owners, and town officials are rallying around the call for a train station in Cohasset Village.

And the MBTA is listening.

In a crowded town hall meeting room Tuesday, the town's railroad mitigation committees and a handful of private residents, met with officials from the MBTA to discuss a myriad of topics.

But their number one priority was changing the location of the town's railroad station currently planned for Route 3A at the former skating rink site.

Monday, selectmen unanimously endorsed the village as the preferable site for a train station.

Staff Railroad Mitigation Committee member Bob Sturdy, in speaking for a downtown stop, stressed that Route 3A is already overdeveloped and that adversely affects Cohasset Village shops. (There are two mitigation committees in Cohasset, one primarily made up of town officials and the other consists of residents who

Town subsidies for Title V repairs are floated

North Cohasset heartened by hope of cost sharing

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Future North Cohasset sewer users are encouraged by a number of developments that might gain broad-based voter support for cost sharing.

At last week's sewer meeting, commission chairman Ted Guild offered a proposal that would include subsidies for homeowners with failing septic systems under a state-subsidized loan program with possible further subsidy from the taxpayers.

For the most part, those facing expensive repairs or replacements of their septic systems under Title V (the state environmental code) have not wanted to share the cost of installing sewers in other parts of town. An override representing half the cost of sewering 345 homes in North Cohasset failed at the ballot box May 4.

Since then, North Cohasset residents hope that by joining forces with the 440 homeowners slated for sewers in central Cohasset — a 50/50, user/town shared-payment plan might pass muster with voters in another override.

In a draft resolution proposed for the

Cohasset's Week

Greenbush mitigation meeting is set for July 30

The Citizen's Advisory Committee for the Old Colony/Greenbush Railroad line has scheduled its second public meeting Tuesday, July 30, at 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall. The meeting will focus on the issues facing Cohasset with the restoration of the railroad. The committee wishes to solicit comments from the public relative to mitigation measures.

Station location, traffic and parking, air and noise pollution, wetlands and herbicides and safety and financial issues will be discussed. Abutters and all interested Cohasset residents are urged to attend.

To make comments or to request further information, contact the committee: James A. Mullen, chairman; Peter Pearce, John Rafferty, Edward F. Woods, Barbara Canney, Nancy J. Butler and Mary A. Foley; or write the Citizen's Advisory Committee for the Old Colony/Greenbush Railroad Line c/o Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, 02025.

Voke representative named

David M. Kneeland, 60 Doane St., will represent Cohasset on the regional school committee that oversees South Shore Regional Vocational High School in Hanover.

Kneeland replaces Laurence Mitchell who recently stepped down from the post.

"I talked with (school) Supt. James Hager and to Larry Mitchell," Kneeland told selectmen this week.

"I am interested as a way of serving the community," said Kneeland ,whose background is in architecture and construction.

Selectmen unanimously approved Kneeland's appointment.

Snow plowing service for condos possible

Selectmen agree that it is inequitable that condominium projects, Wheelwright Farm and Cedar Acres, are not plowed by the town.

They promised residents this week that they will take the matter up with DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield "before the snow flies" because the streets involved are the only two private ways in Cohasset not plowed by the town.

But having the streets accepted as public ways is another matter, they said.

Selectmen recently appointed a committee to examine the issue of private ways and the criterion for town acceptance as public ways.

One-half the roads in town are private ways, Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said.

Assisted-living complex planned for Route 3A

A three-story, 62-unit assisted-living complex for the elderly is being planned for 125 King Street (Route 3A), selectmen learned this week.

The 49,500 square foot building with associated parking will be at the site where the Deck Point affordable housing project was planned in 1989 but never built. About three years ago, a supermarket was proposed there.

Selectmen will pull the file on the Deck Point project to glean any environmental concerns they had about that project, such as curb cuts and traffic, and send their concerns on to the state.

The state environmental office posted the project and the town must comment within 20 days.

King St. widening sought

The town will investigate adding a sidewalk and widening the stretch of King Street from 310 King St. past the town water plant all the way to Peppermint Brook including the culvert, selectmen said Monday.

Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said the street is only 19 feet wide and has no shoulder. Plans are to widen the road to 24 feet and add a five-foot wide sidewalk.

Selectmen will ask the Norfolk County Engineers to develop a concept plan including estimated costs. As an interim step, they will pursue a heavy-truck exclusion on the road because of safety issues even though that part of King Street does not meet the minimum of 5 percent truck traffic required by the state for such exclusions.

"The narrowness drives home the safety concern," Doyon told the board.

Doyon said 20-25 vendors have already been asked to direct their truck drivers not to use that section of King Street.

Town subsidies for Title V repairs are floated

August 12 special town meeting, sewer commissioners had asked that selectmen embody funding for the two sewer projects and Title V repairs into a single override.

But because more information is needed, selectmen will not include the resolution or a similar article on the warrant.

"Because town money would be used for some percentage of an upgrade of a septic system, we're not ready to go with this yet," Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said this week.

But Brown said the board wanted to assure the people of North Cohasset than a future sewer override would include, at the least, a town/user shared financing plan for the North and Central Cohasset sewer projects. Selectmen voted unanimously to go on record that they expect to combine overrides for the Central Cohasset sewer expansion and the North Cohasset sewer project in a single Prop. 2-1/2 override question when the Central Cohasset project is brought to town meeting (probably next spring).

An Aug. 12 article asking for reconsideration of the North Cohasset sewer project (approved at the March 30 annual town meeting) may be indefinitely postponed or withdrawn, proponents said following the sewer meeting last week.

Guild warned that overturning the annual town meeting sewer article could stop the project and put favorable state funding in jeopardy.

Howe Road resident James Laggrotteria, who is chairman of the board of assessors, said wastewater difficulties are a town-wide problem.

"Tying Title V in is smart," Laggrotteria said.

He noted that the assessors sent letters to those who pulled permits for septic system repairs. Of those who replied, the average new septic system cost $28,860 and the average repair was $17,600.

"When you look at these numbers, it's a hell of a lot cheaper to go sewer," he said.

Without cost sharing, North Cohasset homeowners will pay $870 a year for 20 years in betterment charges for the sewer and Central Cohasset will pay $850. This does not include maintenance and operation costs of the system.

At the Aug. 12 meeting, an article will make $1/2 million in subsidized loans available at below market rates for those facing septic system repairs. Cohasset has been approved for $3 million over six years in need-blind loans for private septic system repairs or replacements. Town meeting action is needed to allow the town to borrow the money from the state. The town would then lend the money to homeowners. This plan is not part of the override proposal now, but could be at a later date.

In all probability, the override proposal offering subsidies to those to be sewered and possibly those with on-site systems will not come before voters until next spring, Guild said.

Sewer users will not pay betterment charges until construction is completed in mid-1998 for North Cohasset and the spring of 2000 for Central Cohasset.

Another special possible

Two abutters to the proposed new school may take their case to the people.

Selectmen did not accept an article for the Aug. 12 special town meeting dictating design and siting criteria for the new school.

Andrew Foster and Dick O'Brien, both of Old Pasture Road which will run behind the new elementary school, said they'd be forced to gather 200 signatures and call another special town meeting if selectmen didn't include their article on the Aug. 12 warrant.

Foster and O'Brien said they want the school moved up next to the Deer Hill School.

But Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said that wouldn't be fair to other residents who would have to look up at the school. Brown said the location of the new school, which as been moved further away from Old Pasture Road, "is not that much of a detriment."

O'Brien said in his 15 years in the school supply business he'd "never seen a site like this in all his travels."

The men showed selectmen a map of the area and placed cardboard cut-out where the proposed school is and where they'd like to see it relocated. They also displayed photographs of woods and vegetation at the site.

Music Circus site objected to

At least one resident is vehemently opposed to using the 2,300-seat Music Circus as a site for the Aug. 12 special town meeting on the proposed new school.

"It is the worst possible thing that could happen," Nancy Snowdale, 52 Mill Lane, told selectmen Monday.

Opponents of the school forced the special town meeting to reconsider the $9.9 million project. Supporters and opponents of the project are expected to turn out in force on Aug. 12.

She said the flaps would have to be open due to heat and "we'd have every mosquito on the South Shore."

She asked how if the crowd couldn't be controlled at the annual town meeting then how could they expect to control the expected throngs at the Music Circus.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said he found it cumbersome to split people up at the high school and have the overflow crowd watch the proceedings by closed-circuit television.

He said the board would check into having the area "fogged" during the day for mosquitos.

Selectmen will meet with Town Moderator George Marlette at their July 29 meeting to iron out a logistical plan.

They said babysitting would be provided for parents of young children. At the annual town meeting, children disturbed the proceedings and so did citizens who used cellular phones.

Bob Sturdy, 270 Jerusalem Rd., said the back of the gymnasium at the annual town meeting was "Bedlam."

He said children and cellular phones should be banned from the hall.

Selectman Peter Pratt said it was paramount that the "electoral process be preserved." He defended parents with young children and said providing child care was the answer.

"I don't think parents bring children to town meeting because they want to," he said.

Snowdale warned selectmen to do their homework.

"If you don't control it, it's going to be a circus," she said.

Town Moderator George Marlette said Tuesday that the Music Circus was the only workable location for a large crowd. He is in the process of addressing the logistical concerns and said he secured a place in the selectmen's July 29 agenda to discuss the matter.

"I will not permit children in the area when debate is going on," he said. "The disruption is not appropriate."

He explained that the use of cellular phones was primarily by those on both sides of the issues at the last town meeting trying to get the vote out. He said phones would not be allowed and will ask that those with beepers put their signals on vibrate and not beep.

The eclectic world at Carousel Antiques

Shop celebrates 20 years

By SHIRLEY KAWA-JUMP
Special to the Mariner

Visitors to Carousel Antiques, 93 Ripley Road, will find a unique shop, dedicated to making the sometimes dull world of antiques exciting and fun. On constant guard are Doris, Maude and Edith, three mannequins the owners dress in keeping with the current season. There's even a cat darting in and out among the wicker furniture and books.

"It's a fun business to be in," said Amanda Burgoon, one of the shop's owners. "If you like to work for yourself and meet interesting people, it's a great job."

The business was "handed down" to Burgoon by her grandparents and mother. "My mother used to sell antiques out of her home, and my grandparents owned a furniture and antiques business," she said. "My husband just sort of married into it!"

Burgoon opened Carousel 20 years ago with her mother, Norma Kravette. Today, Kravette is semi-retired, working part-time in the shop. Burgoon's husband, Tom, travels frequently as the main buyer.

The shop is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, yet they find they often end up working seven days a week. Burgoon wouldn't have it any other way. "We're having fun, and I think our customers know that when they come in."

The name Carousel Antiques derives from Kravette's love of carousels. "My mother sees this business as a carousel," Burgoon explained. "People use things for awhile, then send them back around to let other people enjoy them." The antiques that were loved years ago are purchased and given a new life, and often a new use, until they are sold again for someone else to treasure.

Carousel Antiques doesn't specialize in any one period or style of furniture. "Specialization just wasn't as much fun as carrying different types of furniture and attracting different types of customers," Burgoon stated. She describes their selection as "eclectic," and finds that a varied mix of styles allows for a wider client base. "We have everything from young people just starting out and looking for inexpensive used furniture to serious collectors searching for a particular piece."

'My mother sees this business as a carousel. People use things for awhile, then send them back around to let other people enjoy them.'
— Amanda Burgoon.

She has found that keeping some gently used and moderately priced furniture in her inventory is an added bonus for customers. "Anything good in period always sells," Burgoon said. "However, the demand for quality used furniture has grown every year."

Burgoon has also learned not to be surprised by the things people consider collectible. "We're selling pieces now that we didn't even carry before," she said.

Popular among some of her clients are McDonald's toys, for instance. Their inventory includes Victorian, mahogany and oak furniture, post cards, comic books, paintings, pottery, toys and oriental rugs. They do buy single items from customers, but acquire most of their pieces through estate sales, finding the historical area of New England a prime source.

One of the most unique pieces that Burgoon recently sold is a Mansard Colonial doll house. "What made this different is that every room had a swinging door, rather than the typical open back," stated Burgoon.

The shop also sold several pieces of furniture to the set decorator for "The Witches of Eastwick," which was shot locally a few years ago. "It was fun to see our merchandise in the movie," said Burgoon. She added that many of the celebrities performing at the nearby South Shore Music Circus are frequent customers, adding "a whole other dimension" to the shop.

Burgoon keeps a file of "want lists" for her customers, and calls them when pieces come that fit their specifications. She finds that sometimes it's hard to keep track of everything. "Our stock changes daily. We don't have a day that goes by without a new piece coming in."

Burgoon describes her store and her approach to customers as "very laid back. We love to have browsers. We're not afraid to have children come in and handle things."

She has found that between mannequins and the cat, the store has a unique feel and approach. This atmosphere is planned to reflect the Burgoon and Kravette philosophy on antique stores. To the owners of Carousel Antiques, shopping for collectibles should be an enjoyable experience. "When it stops being fun," she said, "it's time to shut the doors."

Carousel Antiques, located at 93 Ripley Road, is open Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. They can be reached by phone at (800) 670-8818, 383-9654 or 383-6513.

Bertha drenches Cohasset

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Tropical storm Bertha had petered out by the time she arrived in Cohasset on Saturday, downgraded from the hurricane that came ashore a day earlier in North Carolina with 80-mile-per-hour winds.

Arriving in Cohasset, Bertha's winds were measured at 40 miles per hour, but the storm did manage to drench the area, with more than 3-1/2 inches of rain recorded at the nearby Hingham Weather Station, according to Mariner Newspaper weather observer Bob Skilling.

This set a new record for the single wettest July day, surpassing the 3.20 inches measured on July 13, 1981.

Assistant Harbormaster Bob Baggs the rain was the only problem in Cohasset Harbor, where water had to be bailed from several small open boats.

He said there was no wind damage and no broken moorings as a result of the storm.

Bertha sets a new July one-day rainfall record (but we can't seem to break 86 degrees)

A rapidly weakening Tropical Storm Bertha brought 3.68 inches of rainfall in just 18 hours on Saturday, July 13. A category 2 hurricane when it moved inland in North Carolina, Bertha was quickly downgraded to a tropical storm, with top winds of 50 to 60 miles per hour by the time she reached New England. There were a few wind gusts to around 70 mph reported along the south coastal areas of Massachusetts and in Rhode Island. Here, though, it was a little breezy, but nothing unusual. The rainfall for the day of more than 3-1/2 inches surpassed the previous record of 3.20 inches for any one July day on the over 40-year record of the weather station. A large band of thunderstorms moved through early in the morning, well in advance of Bertha. We had about 2-1/2 hours of frequent cloud-to-cloud lightning and the thunder kept rumbling from 3 a.m. to 6 a.m.

Rainfall for the month of July is now almost three times the normal amount for the first half of the month and for the year, we're running almost 6 inches above normal.

Temperatures are averaging slightly above normal and the maximum thermometer seems to be stuck at 86 degrees. The mercury has stopped at that point on July 6, 8, 9, 14, and 16. Considering that the high temperature for June was also 86 degrees on two dates, we have a 7-way tie for the summer's high temperature—at least through July 16.

That may change later this week, with readings in the 90s predicted, as we reach what is normally the warmest time of year. That period stretches from July 18 to August 1.

Who can remember the warmest days we've recorded so far this year were in May, on the 20th and 21st, when the mercury reached 92 degrees?

St. Stephen's Carillon concerts

The 72nd series of summer carillon recitals will be given on the 57-bell carillon in the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Cohasset, on Sundays, through Aug. 25, at 6 p.m. The public is invited to bring lawn chairs, blankets and picnic suppers to Cohasset Common or the church courtyard on Highland Avenue.

The best listening place is the sunken terrace in the middle of Stagecoach Way (pedestrian walk beside Coldwell Banker on Main Street, opposite the tower). Printed programs will be distributed at all locations.

Carillonneurs for the remainder of the series are: July 28, Gideon Bodden, carillonneur of the Mint Tower, Amsterdam, The Netherlands; Aug. 4, Daniel Kerry Kehoe, carillonneur of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.; Aug. 11, J. Samuel Hammond, carillonneur of Duke University; Aug. 18, R. Robin Austin, carillonneur of Princeton University; and Aug. 25, Sally Slade Warner, carillonneur of St. Stephen's Church, Cohasset and Phillips Academy, Andover.

The final concert will include requests previously submitted by listeners. The deadline for requests is Sunday, Aug. 11, following Mr. Hammond's recital.

For further information, or to submit requests for the Aug. 25 program, call Sally Slade Warner at (508) 475-2599; the church at 383-1083; or Mary Kennedy, assistant carillonneur of St. Stephen's at 383-9599.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Happy birthday to several Cohasset nonagenarians

In the whoops department, last week we wished Carole Smith all the best for a future in the business world!

Carole, daughter of Peter and Mary Ellen Smith of Cohasset, is a recent graduate of Williams College. She plans to attend the University of Mass. Medical School in Worcester. Sorry about the mix-up, Carole.

Let's start off the week by wishing three amazing ladies a very special birthday greeting. On July 9, Marjorie Leavitt turned 93; on July 13, Helen Livingston turned 91; and Olive Weisenfluh turned 93 July 23. Hope your celebrations were very special ones indeed!

Lots of you may have noticed a change in the streets recently. That's because Bill McAuliffe isn't there to give a wave or smile while working for the Water Department. Bill retired June 28 after 36 years of service.

He is still working parttime for Cohasset Water Services Inc., but it really seems funny not seeing him in the white Water Department trucks. Here's to a healthy and happy retirement, Bill. Now you really have time to enjoy all your beautiful grandchildren!

Had a nice chat with Anna Abbruzzese the other day, and she wanted to be sure to remind everyone that the Farmer's Market will begin Aug. 1, continuing every Thursday through the end of September. It will be located in the town parking lot behind the village, and six local vendors have signed up, promising to provide lots of great things—veggies, fruits, herbs, flowers, plants, oils and vinegars. Won't it be grand to buy locally grown produce?

Chamber Vice President Dean Rizzo says additional vendors are welcome — so, if your garden is looking prolific, give him a call at 383-1994 for more information.

Trinity College sent out its list of grads, and Cohasset's Christopher Henderson made the grade — he received a bachelor's degree in psychology. Christopher is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Henderson, North Main Street. Congrats go to you!

Entertainer Bill Cosby urged Boston College's Class of 1996 to be grateful to its professors at the university's 120th commencement May 20. Cosby was the recipient of an honorary doctor of humane letters degree. Four Cohasset residents earned degrees of their own. Nicole Lynn Bieryla, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Bieryla, Old Coach Road, graduated with a BS from the School of Management, where she majored in finance and marketing.

Donald Ross MacLeod III, Cedar Acres Lane, received a BS from the School of Arts and Sciences, where he studied chemistry, and Corrina G. Minnar, Ledgewood Drive, a nursing major, was awarded a BS from the School of Nursing. Corrina's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Peter Richard Minnar.

Oliver C. Nivaud, Atlantic Avenue, a marketing major, received a BS degree from the School of Management. Our congratulations go out to all of you, along with our hopes for the brightest of futures for you all.

Bates College sends us news to end all student news for this week, and it comes in the form of the dean's list for the second semester of the 1995-'96 academic year. Nicholas B. Terry, a sophomore history major, was named to the dean's list. He is the son of David and Suzanne Terry of Margin Street, and a 1994 CHS grad.

Did you happen to see a plane in the Sandy Cove area July 8? It had a banner holding Happy Birthday greetings for Tony Catlin, who was celebrating his 60th birthday. Tony's wife, Shifi, hostessed a gala party for the event, and his family and friends came from all over to attend. Sally Wood came up from Florida! Carmine catered, and was grand as usual. People are still talking about the fun they had, and we extend our best wishes to you, too, Tony.

Don't forget the perfect way to end your weekend is to go down to the Common and listen to the carillon concerts put on by St. Stephen's Church Sundays at 6 p.m. Bring your blanket or lawn chairs, and perhaps even a picnic supper. Then just enjoy a nice evening. The carillonneurs come from all over the world to play summer carillon recitals for us. We really are lucky!

Alex and Donna Fulton, Windy Hill, are proud grandparents of a baby girl, Lily Craig Zildjian, born last October in Shaoyang, China. She traveled halfway around the world to her new home in Duxbury with her adoptive parents, Andy and Debbie Zildjian. Her paternal grandparents are Robert and Willi Zildjian of Norwell.

That's the news for this week. Please get in touch if you have an event to report!

Rose and Mike O'Connell join Ann Bunstein at the 1995 Cohasset Sailing Club Lobsterfest.

Sailing Club Lobsterfest is July 20

The Cohasset Sailing Club is sponsoring its annual clambake for members and their guests from 7 p.m. to midnight Saturday, July 20. (This event is scheduled in July this year as the Sail Club is co-hosting the Mass. Bay Junior Sailing Regatta in August — 300 kids to race!)

Cohasset's Dan Anderson will provide the clambake, and DJ With Class will be there for music and dancing.

The menu includes New England clam chowder with oyster crackers, steamers with drawn butter, native corn on the cob, sweet sausage, coleslaw, assorted rolls, chilled watermelon, and a choice of a select steamed lobster (1-1/4 lb.) or a 12 oz. sirloin steak. The cost is $26 per person and participants should bring their own beverages. This event will be held under the tents as usual, rain or shine. Casual attire.

Tickets must be paid for no later than Thursday, July 18. Payment may be brought to the sailing club and given to the instructor in the office (there will be a designated box on the desk to put your checks) or dropped off to the front step mail box of Lyn Previte, 38 Summer Street. Checks MUST indicate the number of steak or lobster dinners desired. For questions or information, call Lyn at 383-9723.

Come to a concert on the Common

The Cohasset Recreation Department will present a concert on Cohasset Common, Tuesday, July 23, at 7:30 p.m. The event is made possible by matching grants from the South Shore Playhouse Associates and the American Federation of Musicians.

The South Shore Concert Band, under the direction of Richard Whitmarsh, will perform. The concert is free of charge, and those attending are encouraged to bring lawn chairs or blankets to sit on.

EDITORIAL

A new venue

Plans are to hold Cohasset's August 12 Special Town Meeting on the proposed $9.9 million new elementary school at the Music Circus.

While this location for a town meeting may seem bizarre to some, we agree with selectmen and Town Moderator George Marlette that the Big Top can work.

Depending on the town business at hand, Cohasset's routine town meetings usually draw just a couple hundred citizens over the course of a six-to-eight hour day . Those numbers can easily be handled in the high school auditorium.

Those special and annual town meetings, with controversial issues to address, have moved to the high school gym. The largest in recent memory was the special town meeting on the train which drew slightly more than 600 voters.

While the spring town meeting drew hundreds of sewer and school supporters, no more than about 500 occupied the gym at any one time.

But Aug. 12 could be different. For one thing, it's August. There's a good chance it'll be hot and humid. While sitting in the tent isn't ideal — it's a lot cooler than the high school gym which isn't air conditioned.

Also, this special is bound to draw a huge crowd.

Five hundred signed the special town meeting petition to force a new vote on the school. So if all of those people come, plus 500 or more school supporters — they'll be 1,000 — far too many for the gym.

Satellite sites work in Hingham where routinely town meeting attracts more than that town's high school gym can accommodate. In Hingham, they are used to having closed-circuit TV screens providing coverage in the auditorium and other locations in the school.

But because this vote is so important — and Cohasset would be a virtual rookie in dealing with multiple sites, the Music Circus is the best alternative.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said the area would be "fogged" early in the day to keep most mosquitos at bay.

But most importantly, all of us will be able to see and hear the debate and presentations firsthand.

Thanks to the directors of South Shore Playhouse Associates for their community spirit in allowing the town to use the Music Circus.

Selectmen will meet with Mr. Marlette on July 29 to iron out any logistical details including what baby-sitting arrangements can be made for parents with small children.

Now all that's left for us, is to attend — and bring along some bug repellant just in case.

Citizens' voice must be heard

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

Competition improves products in the marketplace, and concerns and constructive criticism will improve Cohasset's new primary school. When citizens of this town criticize the new school, it is because they want the very best for our children and see serious flaws and inadequacies in its design and site.

In fact, that process of vocal and written comment has already started to force changes in those deficient areas. It shocks me to read letters and hear comments of elected officials, committee members and public employees who would want the citizens of this town to simply be quiet and take what they are given. This is exactly the kind of arrogant attitude and philosophy that we abhor, and is totally contrary to the free democracy that so many thousands of our citizens have sacrificed so much to defend.

This is a representative government, and the First Amendment of our Bill of Rights guarantees the people the free voice to protest and petition change. There are no potentates allowed here, and no public official or town employee has the right to muzzle the voice of even one citizen.

COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER COMPANY

New school opposition urged

To the Editor:

Cohasset taxpayers are in a "school daze" over a primary school to be built in town. This "school daze" has evolved because issues have become muddled. Town officials, citizens and newspaper reports have tried to turn this monumental project into a moral and educational issue by declaring that this is "the right thing to do" and that we must "show support" for committee decisions.

Stop! This is not an educational or moral issue. What we have here is a monumental building project. Buildings alone cannot improve our children's education. What takes place within that building can.

The citizens of Cohasset have been told that taxes will increase by a substantial amount if this school is built, because so many other projects are already being funded by this town of only 2,700 taxpaying properties. Upcoming projects include a $16 million sewer project, a $9 million dump capping project and the proposed $16 million ($9,980,000 plus interest) for the new school project.

If this school is built as planned, people who would like to buy homes in our community may hesitate to assume a property's huge tax bill, much higher than comparable homes in nearby towns. In order to sell our homes, prices would be lowered, and property values decreased.

Yes, we must be fiscally responsible. No, we must not mortgage the future of our town — and the future of those 5-, 6- and 7-year-olds. Attend Town Meeting Aug. 12 and vote yes to reconsider the April 1 vote. Then, after carefully and responsibly listening to and weighing the facts, vote no on this very expensive building project. Instead, let the townspeople work together to find the best reasonable solution for improving our schools' educational facilities.

Greenbush not so green, local foe claims

Says MBTA creates smoke screen on amount of train pollution

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Usin_ detailed pollution facts and emission figures, environmental activist Kevin O'Keeffe is working to derail the Greenbush restoration project.

South Shore resident and architectural designer, O'Keeffe says he can prove that in its environmental impact reports on Greenbush, the MBTA has omitted and misrepresented facts about how much more diesel-powered commuter trains will pollute the air than the automobiles they divert from area highways.

And O'Keeffe's opposition to diesel commuter trains is not limited to the Greenbush project. He is out to block all MBTA diesel commuter rail expansion including lines planned for Fall River/New Bedford and Worcester.

To help educate citizens and spread awareness, O'Keeffe founded the non-profit, Milton-based organization, Technical Resources for Environmental Quality, Inc. (TREQ), which lists as its purpose "research, education and public interest legal actions in support and defense of the constitutional right of the citizens of Massachusetts to clean air and water, freedom from unnecessary noise; and the natural, scenic, historic and esthetic qualities of their environment."

O'Keeffe's findings directly contradict what the MBTA and the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs officials have long touted as the air quality benefits of restoring the rail lines. The Old Colony project is required mitigation for the increased air pollution that will result when Boston's Central Artery Project is completed. According to "T" officials, if the rail lines are not built, the state will face another lawsuit by the Conservation Law Foundation, a national environmental law organization.

But according to O'Keeffe, there is such political pressure to reconstruct the Old Colony rail line which went out of service in 1959, that if the Conservation Law Foundation threat did not exist, "the MBTA would have had to make one up."

MBTA officials refute O'Keeffe's claims, question his qualifications in air quality analysis, and maintain that nothing is being concealed from or misrepresented to the public.

MBTA Director of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan said that in meeting with O'Keeffe on these issues and reviewing his studies, it appeared that O'Keeffe had pulled some of his numbers out of the air and left out major sections of the MBTA's reports.

As to the MBTA's figures on air quality, Brennan said all of the emissions' figures will be included in the final environmental impact report which is due in the spring of 1997.

Construction work is nearing completion on both the Old Colony Plymouth and Middleboro lines with service expected to begin in Sept. 1997. The MBTA hopes to restore service to the 17.7-mile Greenbush rail line by some time in 1999.

O'Keeffe got into the Greenbush fray last year when he proposed the Accord Terminal, a centrally located regional commuter train station that could offer express train service, eliminating the intrusion of heavy diesel trains and the pollution they cause in residential neighborhoods. Criticizing the proposal for allowing regional automobile use which would result in increased air pollution, the MBTA did not seriously consider the Accord Terminal alternative, O'Keeffe said.

O'Keeffe then set out to study and quantify the actual air quality implications of automobiles versus diesel trains and came up with figures that differed greatly from those included in the MBTA's environmental impact studies.

According to O'Keeffe, the MBTA was able to show that the trains would improve air quality by completely omitting locomotive emissions from the air quality analyses for all three lines — Plymouth, Middleboro and Greenbush — of the Old Colony Railroad.

In addition, O'Keeffe said the "T" overstated the amount of automobile emissions to be diverted when train service begins, by a factor of five. Other misapplications of data and misrepresentations of emissions' figures and locomotive fuel consumption were used in analyses of the Worcester extension project and the the New Bedford/Fall River lines, he said.

And in none of the studies, did the "T' consider what O'Keeffe calls "induced highway use" or"backfill," the cars that will replace those initially diverted when rail service begins. O'Keeffe maintains that area roadways and highways will temporarily improve when rail service is restored making it more attractive for commuters to drive to work. Within a year, O'Keeffe predicts that the automobiles diverted will be replaced by new ones and the pollution they previously caused, restored.

But Brennan said the MBTA did indeed factor this information into its ridership studies in the draft environmental report, and again he noted that all of this information will be included in the final environmental impact study.

The pollution to worry about is ground level ozone and particulate emissions, said O'Keeffe who noted that the proposed MBTA diesel expansion will result in a ten-fold increase in the pollutants which create ground level ozone, and one-hundred times the out put of cancer-causing particulate emissions. By 2005, O'Keeffe charged air pollution from these new MBTA rail projects will be twice that off all the cars diverted by the trains.

But Brennan explains that there are differences in the types and acceptable levels of pollutants involved and said that O'Keeffe is not equipped or qualified to follow the analyses.

Brennan said diesel train emissions produce NOx, oxides of nitrogen, and according to state environmental officials, Massachusetts does not have a major problem with NOx.

"This does not give a license to dump as much NOx as you want, but it means the state is not in violation of clean air standards for it," Brennan said.

Volatile Organic Compounds — VOC, however, which are primarily emitted by automobiles, are a problem for the state, and that is what public transit will help reduce, Brennan said.

When NOx emissions are combined with VOC emissions at a certain ratio and mix with sunlight, the result is smog. In order to lower VOC emissions, higher NOx emissions could be the result. Brennan used the analogy of a sick patient who takes medicine to cure his illness with the knowledge the drug may have some side effects.

"O'Keeffe is saying that the side effect of the medicine is worse than the disease itself," Brennan noted.

O'Keeffe, who says he has no ties to the Coastal Coalition, a group of citizen activists who oppose the Greenbush rail restoration, hopes to derail all of the MBTA's current diesel rail projects, and see them redesigned to include cleaner, electric-powered trains. He is willing to launch a lawsuit if necessary to do so.

In a TREQ informational paper, O'Keeffe wrote, "Willful misrepresentations which are material to the environmental impact of a project, and presented in any required environmental document or proceeding, allow legal actions which are neither limited in time nor limited by any regulatory certifications."

Misrepresentation of data and figures can also jeopardize federal funding for state projects, O'Keeffe noted.

But Brennan is confident legal challenges will not derail Greenbush.

"We would not have brought this forward if we thought we were opening the MBTA to a lawsuit," said Brennan, adding "we're confident we have good legal standing and good case law behind us."

COUNCIL CORNER/Kathie O'Neil

The last council meetings for the Cohasset school year 1995-96 were held recently. A synopsis of the agenda covered by each follows.

Joseph Osgood: The school improvement plan was reviewed and additions and deletions made. Discussion about the kindergarten move to the Deer Hill, which will be overseen by the Osgood principal, special teachers and adjustment counselor. The council is still seeking a community member to complete this group.

Deer Hill: It was reported that Supt. Hart is beginning the search for a new principal to be hired this summer. The Harborfest float was postponed until next year. Money received from Jean Driscoll, athelete who recently spoke at the school, is targeted for playground improvement. Goals for next year include increasing parent involvement, improving school climate, maintaining communication and assisting the new principal.

Jr./Sr. high school: New members Ron Ford, Tom O'Neil, Liz Kidder, Jared Batts and Pat Baird were introduced. CHS is now a member of the National Alliance of High Schools, which will provide networking capabilitites with more than 400 schools. Summer plans were discussed, with possibilities being the English and social studies depts. working on cirriculum frameworks; technology/math lab rehab to improve reliability; and maintenance work, including sprucing up the building with some carpeting and paint.

Village train stop, better sidewalks top survey responses

So far the Cohasset Village Revitalization Committee, made up of interested citizens, the Chamber of Commerce and local merchants, has received 81 responses to its village survey distributed last month.

Some of the responses are as follows:

• Would you like the train to stop in the village?
Yes: 59 No: 13

• Do you think the village needs to improve sidewalks and parking areas?
Yes: 50 No: 13

• Do you think the village needs public restrooms?
Yes 44 No: 20

• Would you like to have special events, such as sidewalk sales?
Yes: 34 No: 30

• Would you recommend Cohasset to friends or family as a place to establish their business?
Yes: 37 No: 23

The most popular answers to what kind of businesses would you support in Cohasset were: clothing store (19), restaurants (16), gourmet food mart (17), pharmacy (10), fabric/linen store (9), gift store (8), book store (7), movie theater (5), pub (5), gourmet coffee (3).

The most common answers to what kinds of beautifcation efforts would you like to see in the village were: flower planters (22), improved signs (10), benches (7), antique lighting (6), and trash recepticles (7).

Chamber vice president Dean Rizzo said responses are still being accepted at Aquarius Sunrooms, 22 Depot Court; Cards 'n Shards, 45 South Main St.; and The Artist's Son, 130 King St. (Route 3A).

Station would help revitalize downtown

are soliciting the concerns of citizens).

"There is tremendous pressure on the downtown area," Sturdy said. "And any further business development in the area of the former ice rink site would be the death knell of Cohasset Village.

"This (a downtown station) would revitalize the area," he said.

MBTA Manager of Environmental Affairs, Andrew Brennan, said the T was not looking to put a second stop in Cohasset. If the town consensus was for a different station site other than the one proposed, the MBTA would listen to ideas.

"If we can find a way of locating a station that fits the needs and goals of the MBTA, than I'm willing to pass that on. If it's something that works, I'll do all I can to sell it to my boss. We are very open to taking a look and moving this," Brennan said.

Brennan's only concern about a downtown location was the existing curve of the railroad right-of-way. He said anything greater than a four percent curve would be looked at as unacceptable by MBTA engineers and, as of now, the downtown site has a double curve of eight and six percent. He said unless something could be done to alleviate this situation, there could be some problems.

On-site parking for the village site could encompass a two-story garage. The lower level being underground and the top level being on a plane with the train platform thereby meeting requirements set up for persons with disabilities. The entire parking facility would be out of sight from adjacent roadways due to the configuration of the surrounding geographic area.

Brennan said that MBTA officials are taking a radically different approach from past policies in working with communities that will be impacted by the restoration of the rail line.

This included going into each town, talking to officials and residents and saying: "We want to develop a mitigation plan with you."

To this end, Brennan lauded town officials.

"Cohasset, more so than other towns, has taken the approach of seeing what can be done by planning this through."

He said MBTA officials have identified the following four problem areas: traffic, noise, public safety, and miscellaneous issues such as wetlands, property sales and maintenance of equipment.

> 'If we can find a way of locating a station that fits the needs and goals of the MBTA, than I'm willing to pass that on. If it's something that works, I'll do all I can to sell it to my boss. We are very open to taking a look and moving this.'
> — Andrew Brennan, MBTA environmental affairs manager.

Brennan cautioned that while he is open to opinions there is only so much he can do.

"There are things I can do, things I can't do and we'll sees."

He announced MBTA plans to establish a Mitigation Tracking System to keep the town informed on the status and schedule of noted concerns. An updated bulletin will be issued monthly. Town Administrator Gregory Doyon will be the liaison for Cohasset, he said.

The next step in the train process is the MBTA's filing of permits within affected towns and the holding of more meetings with town boards. MBTA noise experts are scheduled to meet with local officials at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, July 23 at the Lightkeeper's Residence on Government Island.

Farmer's market to start soon

The Chamber of Commerce is working with the Village Renaissance Committee in establishing a farmer's market in the village.

The farmer's market will be held from 4 to 8 p.m, Thursdays from Aug. 1 through the end of September in the town parking lot behind the village.

Six local vendors have signed up and will provide shoppers with a variety of goods including fruits, vegetables, herbs, flowers, plants, oils and vinegars, Chamber vice president Dean Rizzo said.

Additional vendors are welcome. Call Rizzo at 383-1994 for more information.

More citizen input sought at July 30 rail hearing

Village stop gains momentum

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

Unless there is a decided shift in opinion of Cohasset residents at a final public hearing to be held later this month, the Citizen's Mitigation Committee for the restoration of the Old Colony Railroad's Greenbush line is set to recommend to the town's Railroad Mitigation Committee that Cohasset Village be the primary location stop once the commuter train begins operation anew in 1999.

Whether the MBTA's location of a commuter stop along Route 3A, at the site of the former Cohasset Winter Gardens ice skating rink, and now a recycling company, will remain as a second town location will be left up to the judgment of state transportation officials, committee members agreed last week.

The citizen's committee will meet Tuesday, July 30, at 7:30 p.m. in Cohasset Town Hall. Committee Chairman Jim Mullen requested that all residents with any type of concern attend, as the public hearing will be their last opportunity to express to state authorities, by way of Cohasset officials, their opinions, as well as offer suggestions on impact issues such as station location, air quality, noise, safety, wetlands and rail construction.

The selection of a downtown train stop appears to have caught both local and state officials off guard. The MBTA was under the impression that the Cohasset stop would be situated along the less populated Route 3A border with Hingham. Equally, Cohasset town officials felt a village stop would be completely out of line with community thinking.

But at the May 20 Citizen's Mitigation Committee hearing, the majority consent was if the commuter train is to travel through the center of town anyway, then it would be only logical to have a village stop, with shop owners believing they would significantly benefit. Locating a stop in Cohasset Village would also eliminate the community fear of a train speeding through the center of town.

Even this scenario may not be without its problems or options.

A North Cohasset/Route 3A 5.5-acre site would provide parking for 300 vehicles. Consequently, if the MBTA were to eliminate this location in favor of a downtown Cohasset stop, commuter parking would have to be established adjacent to the rail facility, and to that end, the town's parent Railroad Mitigation Committee has passed on to the citizen's committee one such rendition of what this may entail.

The drawing depicts a 790-foot raised railway platform with proposed parking for 350 vehicles at the town center stop. Approximately 200 vehicles would be in the area directly behind the Red Lion Inn on North Main Street. This portion of the parking facility would have to be excavated, and two highway department buildings would have to be demolished. The remaining 150-vehicle parking area is the existing town lot off Pleasant Street.

If the North Cohasset location were to remain as a second stop, thereby providing the bulk of commuter parking, the question of additional morning and evening traffic clogging an already congested downtown could be rendered moot by restricting vehicles to a "drop-of and pick-up" zone.

Another station possibility revolves around the use of the Osgood School site. Committee members pondered the idea of using the facility as the downtown stop. This way, parking could be provided just outside of the downtown area, but still within walking distance for commuters/residents who did not wish to drive to the rail terminal. The downtown area would also be spared excess congestion, as overflow commuters from the Scituate station would use Route 3A, as opposed to North Main Street, to get to this location.

Though committee member Peter Pearce wondered whether or not the school facility could be made available to meet the Greenbush schedule, he said the option would be presented to residents for their discussion at the July 30 meeting.

There was also clarification from the MBTA on its statement that only 5,000 square feet of wetlands would be impacted by rail construction in Cohasset.

MBTA estimates did not originally include wetlands that were encompassed by the Greenbush right-of-way. Therefore, these 5,000 square feet would be in addition to whatever that figure might be.

Kindergarten to go to Deer Hill in fall

New Osgood principal hired

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

As plans for the new elementary school are discussed, staff at the Osgood School is gearing up for next year, which may pose a bit of a challenge.

Due to space constraints, the four kindergarten sections will be moved from the Osgood to the Deer Hill School.

In addition, Osgood Principal Linda Whitney has resigned after six years to spend more time with her family.

"It is a great loss to the system. She did an excellent job," said schools' Supt. Stephen Hart during the July 11 school committee meeting. "She implemented a number of new programs. She was conscientious and extremely devoted to her job."

Merilee Cantelmo of Marshfield will replace her, Hart said.

Cantelmo has most recently been a principal for an elementary school in Bedford, a post she held for the past two years.

Prior to that she was an assistant elementary principal in Plymouth for four years.

Six years ago, Cantelmo was the curriculum coordinator for Cohasset schools.

School council member and kindergarten teacher Sharon Moody said there would be a "smooth transition with the new principal. Coffee hours (with the parents) may be scheduled monthly."

Cantelmo will not be the only new face at Osgood.

Teacher Barbara Buckley has decided to stay home with her new baby, and Frank Fitzgerald, an adjustment counselor, has taken a position in a different system.

They will be replaced, Hart said.

Lynn Silva is the new director of student services. She is based at the high school.

There are already 106 students signed up for kindergarten.

"There is no question that there could be five sections," Hart said.

One objective in the school improvement plan, which Moody outlined, is to make the move to Deer Hill as easy as possible for students and parents.

Several mailings have already gone out informing parents of the change. There was also a parent orientation in March; a similar one will be held in September.

Kindergartners will not be completely separated from Osgood.

"We need to make the communication with Osgood very open," Moody said.

She added that the staff and parents don't want the students to have to transition again when they enter the first grade at Osgood.

Kindergarten teachers hope to involve the older children at Deer Hill in the caretaking of the younger children.

The school improvement plan also addressed the issue of the limited play areas at the Osgood School.

Staff members have been talking with other schools to see how they "handle a lot of children in a limited space. (We hope) to optimize our space and minimize our conflicts," Moody said.

There is a respect code at the Osgood School, and children are told to stop, think and plan.

There are now 442 students projected for grades kindergarten to third.

One of the goals of the school council is to reduce class sizes. Council members said they are very concerned about the number of children in the kindergarten for next year.

"The space at Deer Hill isn't as appropriate as it should be," said Moody.

"The committee as a team continues to support the efforts to get a new school," Moody added.

In other business, the committee:

- received an additional $99,000 from the state for Chapter 70 school funds. Other communities on the South Shore also received additional funds.
- reported that materials for the ropes course at the high school had been stolen some time in June. Jack Buckley, who teaches the course, said earlier that the individual, or individuals, had to have a certain amount of knowledge about climbing to be able to reach the equipment.

TV debate flap upsets school chief

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

Hearing about a move to ban him from a TV debate on the school because he doesn't live in town, Supt. Stephen Hart fired back at those responsible.

Hart, a Hingham resident, said that "excluding the person who has been the most intimately involved in the process is a gutless initiative (on the part of those) opposed to quality education in Cohasset."

School opponents and proponents were tentatively scheduled to debate issues on Wigmore Pierson's show on Aug. 4.

The format has since been changed. As it stands now, both sides may each have their own hour-long segment.

There is a special town meeting to reconsider the April positive school vote on Aug. 12.

Roy Fitzsimmons, the president of Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers (the group which circulated the position that drove the special town meeting) put the precondition on the debate that no non-Cohasset residents, except for the architects, could participate.

"(The forum) was for the people of Cohasset. We are the ones paying the taxes; we are the ones voting," Fitzsimmons said on Tuesday.

He added that School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder and School Facilities Chairman Bob Beggan should know as much about the new school as Hart.

Hart said that he had "full confidence" in school committee members, the school facilities committee and the architects, but questioned Fitzsimmons' motives.

"One might ask, what does he have to fear? There is a fear that someone might ask some pointed questions," said Hart. "(The fear of) someone speaking about the education program they have been associated with for 27 years."

"It is somewhat off-putting to suggest who ought to be on our team," agreed Kidder at the July 11 school committee meeting.

School Committee Member Rick Shea suggested that the committee tell Pierson that they wouldn't except that precondition, but would be interested in the forum.

"I think the people deserve to have this opportunity," said Kidder.

New school plans forge ahead

Design Review Board to provide input

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

There is at least one definitive statement that can be made about the new school: it is a work in progress.

On Wednesday, July 10, at what officials state was the 87th school facilities meeting, that fact was again evident as town boards worked with architects and citizens on the new school.

Architect Sid Bowen and landscape architect Joseph Geller, presented a revised plan that created more space for play areas and moved the school further away from abutters on Old Pasture Road.

The structural design and materials for the exterior of the school were also discussed.

Work on the $9.9 million school will continue despite questions raised by the special town meeting set for Aug. 12 to reconsider the positive school vote, said Bob Beggan, chairman of the school facilities committee.

"We are going to build a school," added David Chase, who also sits on the committee.

The town meeting was set by selectmen after they received a petition that had more than 500 signatures.

Schools Supt. Stephen Hart said "people ought to know" that it would cost the town approximately $4 million to renovate the Osgood School to meet state standards.

Due to the 60 percent state reimbursement figure, the town is paying that amount for a new school.

The changes made to the plans for the new school, such as moving the school an additional 40-feet from abutters and 20 feet to the west, were the result of previous comments made by the design review board and citizens.

The shift moved the school further into the wetland, but it is still within the town's wetland bylaw, which allows 2,500 square feet of wetlands to be filled without a waiver.

Members of the conservation commission had suggested this move to accommodate the concerns of abutters.

Bowen cautioned that this does not mean that the commission as a whole will approve the new plans. The school facilities committee is scheduled to meet with the commission tonight in Town Hall, at 7:30 p.m.

Andrew Foster, 84 Old Pasture Road, still had some qualms with the site and drew up a plan which placed the school near Evergreen Road, about 60 feet from the Deer Hill School.

Foster is one of the proponents of a citizen petition that is being circulated that calls for the school to be moved to this location.

He asked the facilities committee why they hadn't studied the site he proposed.

Members replied they had, and listed several reasons why it wasn't suitable, such as its proximity to Deer Hill, and lack of play areas.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said that residents and boards should work together.

"Look at the global picture and don't be hung up on your own particular issue," he said.

Additional changes to the plans were discussed, based on comments made that evening and on costs.

"We are going to make (the school) $9.9 million. That is fact," said Bowen.

He added that to meet the figure the facilities committee may have to make some trade-offs. Lead-coated copper, which is long-lived, and brick for the exterior walls are in the plans now.

Design Review Board (DRB) Member Max Pounder said that he was concerned with the amount of natural light available on the North side of the building because of an overhang.

Bowen replied that the increased size of the windows will offset the affects of the overhang.

The DRB will look at the exterior and interior plans more closely in the coming weeks and make comments to the facilities committee and the architects.

Bowen said suggestions are welcome.

"We are not here to say that we have the only answers," he said.

The school facilities committee won't sign off on the architects' plans until they get the DRB's report.

Beggan asked residents of Old Pasture Road to get together and decide whether or not they wanted a fence or a 10-foot vegetation buffer separating them from school property.

The 10-foot buffer of trees would infringe on the playing fields.

As the plans stand now, behind the school there is a 38,000-square-foot area which can be used for two youth-size soccer fields, and a 28,000- square-foot parcel to the side of the school that could accommodate a T-ball field.

The allotted play area is almost twice the size of the playing fields at Osgood.

Additional playing fields were possible because the two detention basins were combined into one adequate enough to accommodate a 100-year storm.

The basin will only have water in it during a rainstorm.

The school sits on a ridge and has two-stories in the front and one in the back, which faces Old Pasture Road.

"This building has a low profile. From the Old Pasture side it is one story and has a profile not unresidential," Geller said.

The physical site of the new school, which will have 24 classrooms, is 7.8 acres. If the nature trails and the vernal pool are included the site encompasses 13 acres.

Osgood School sits on 4.1 acres.

Earn summer reading credits

In an effort to encourage summer reading, the faculty at the Deer Hill School has developed a plan. Next September, in each corridor of Deer Hill, there will be a section called the "Read" wall. This wall will be covered from ceiling to floor with a piece of red paper,. The children will attach index cards, which will be color-coded for each grade level. The card will show their name and books read during the summer. Each index card will list the titles of five books they have read and will be worth 100 points toward their class' Merit Award. These same five books can also be used for credit in the Paul Pratt Library Summer Reading Program, "Catch the Summer Spark, Read!"

Experience has shown that reading is a basic ingredient for success in school and summer is an ideal time to expand that skill and have fun doing it.

Story hour and puzzle club debut

A story hour for pre-school children will take place every Friday throughout the summer from 10-10:45 a.m. in the Children's Room of the Paul Pratt Library. Children must be 3-1/2 years of age. There is no registration required.

Deer Hill School librarian Marge Murphy is conducting the very popular Puzzle Club on Monday and Tuesday from 7-8:45 p.m. through the last week of August. Children from grades two through six are welcome. They should be sure to bring their library cards. Popsicles, courtesy of the Friends of the Paul Pratt Library, will be served at 8 p.m. Parents must pick their children up no later than 8:45 p.m.

Coach pleased with squad

Golden has seen 'drastic improvements' from 2-0 swim team

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The Scituate Yacht Club escaped damage from Hurricane Bertha last weekend. Unfortunately, the club's swim team felt the full brunt of the Cohasset Swim Team's power as Becky Golden's squad improved its record to 2-0 in the South Shore Swim League with its second consecutive lopsided win.

Unlike the victory over Hanover, where Golden pretty much knew Cohasset had the stronger of the two clubs heading into the meet, she was surprised by the relative ease at which Cohasset disposed of a tough Scituate squad.

"They're one of the largest teams we swim against," Golden said. "We rose to the occasion and a number of swimmers stepped up for us. It was wonderful."

With the season now in full tilt, Golden has been concentrating on increasing the team's overall stamina by upping each individual's yardage during the daily workouts. The interval length has also increased and Golden is still emphasizing the swimmers' stroke form.

The work has obviously paid off for the overwhelming majority of Cohasset's swimmers. Golden saw significant improvements from the Hanover meet by Ali Dempester, Jen Chastian, Tim Ulmber, Dan McCarthy, Kate Kuppens, Karen Garber, Bryce Rafferty and Colin Regan.

When Golden means improvements she is talking about a whopping five seconds or so over 25 yards and nine for 50 yards.

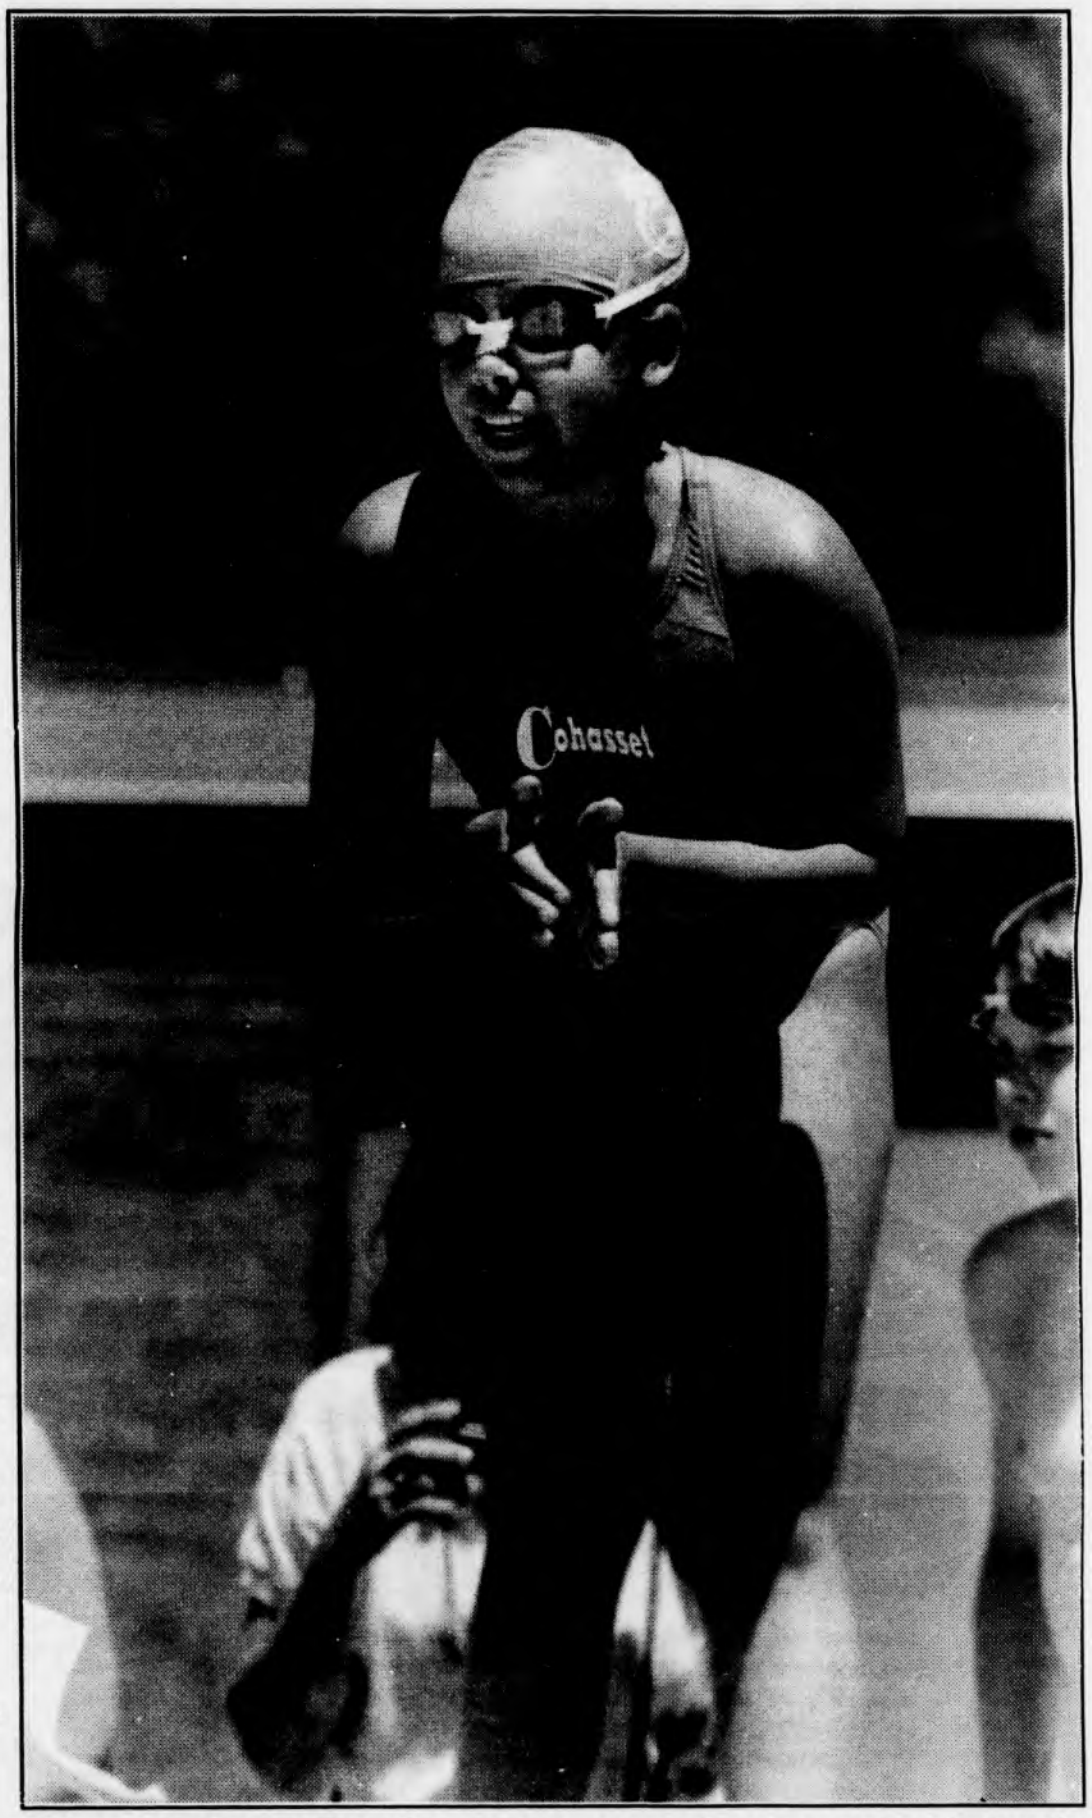
"We've just seen incredible improvements in their times," Golden said. "Some real drastic drops."

The two wins and the faster times have done a lot to motivate the team even more than it had been at the beginning of the season. Each swimmer is keeping a log of his or her times, workouts and races. The swimmers are better able to follow their progress as the season continues using the log-book format.

Golden is confident Cohasset will face a strong AquaDux team (Duxbury) at home on Friday. The squad is affiliated with the Gators Swim Team and Golden isn't sure just how many will be at the meet.

"They have a ton of swimmers," she said. "The Gators usually train together during the winter then swim with the AquaDux in the summer, but I have no idea how many swimmers will show up."

With the strides the Cohasset swimmers are taking, Duxbury should call the troops together and attack swiftly. It just may be their only chance.



Cohasset swimmer Sera Genovese cheers on her teammates during the squad's victory over Scituate Yacht Club.

EXTRA POINTS/Joe Reardon

Don't sweat hot-weather running

Like extreme cold, hot humid weather can cause runners a great deal of discomfort if they don't prepare for the conditions they will be logging their miles in.

Runners needn't cut back on their mileage if they follow a few hints as to how to keep their fitness up during the sweltering summer months in preparation for the fall cross country and road-racing season.

The most important thing to remember when it comes to summer running is that you can't drink enough water. People are supposed to drink at least six glasses of water per day. Runners, on the other hand, should be downing as much water as possible and start drinking early and often in summer road races. The best way to tell if you are properly hydrated is if your urine is clear. The darker the color, the more water you need.

It's also important to remember to run during the coolest times of the day. The warmest hours of the day in the summer months fall between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. Getting up early or running at dusk allows the runner to avoid the hot sun, though it still may be muggy. Also, if you are thinking of changing your running schedule by getting up and packing in the miles in the morning, the summer is the best time to start. It gets light out as early as 5:10 a.m. and the weather is agreeable. By the time the cold winter weather rolls in, you should be used to waking up ready for a good morning workout.

It's best to run in light colors rather than dark because they reflect the sun's rays, making you less likely to feel as hot as you would if wearing dark running clothing.

Don't sweat running

Despite your precautions, you still may experience some problems in the heat. Don't try to push through the warning signs of possible heat prostration or heat stroke. Save your strength for another day and concentrate instead on staying out of the sun and drinking water and juices for much of the day.

Signs of heat problems include dizziness, lightheadedness, clammy skin with little sweating, disorientation, dehydration, nausea and vomiting. Just stop. No workout is worth the risk of putting yourself in a dangerous situation.

Remember, even the best runners in the world have their problems with hot weather. Bill Rodgers ran with the leaders for much of the 1977 Boston Marathon, but the 80-degree temperatures sapped his strength and he wound up dropping out of the race near Boston College. Three-time New York City Marathon winner Alberto Salazar had a very scary experience in the 1978 Falmouth Road Race. Salazar, a 20-year-old college student at the time, drank very little water before the race and none during the race. He ran directly behind Rodgers for six miles, but faded to 10th place over the last 1-1/2 miles.

After the race Salazar was brought to a medical tent where his temperature shot up to 108-degrees. The situation looked so grim that a Catholic priest administered the last rites. However, Salazar pulled through once fluids were administered to him through an intravenous tube and he recovered. Salazar later said he didn't remember running the last 1-1/2 miles of the race.

As good a runner as Salazar is, he didn't follow the guidelines to running in hot weather. Be smart and you should have a long, productive summer on the roads.

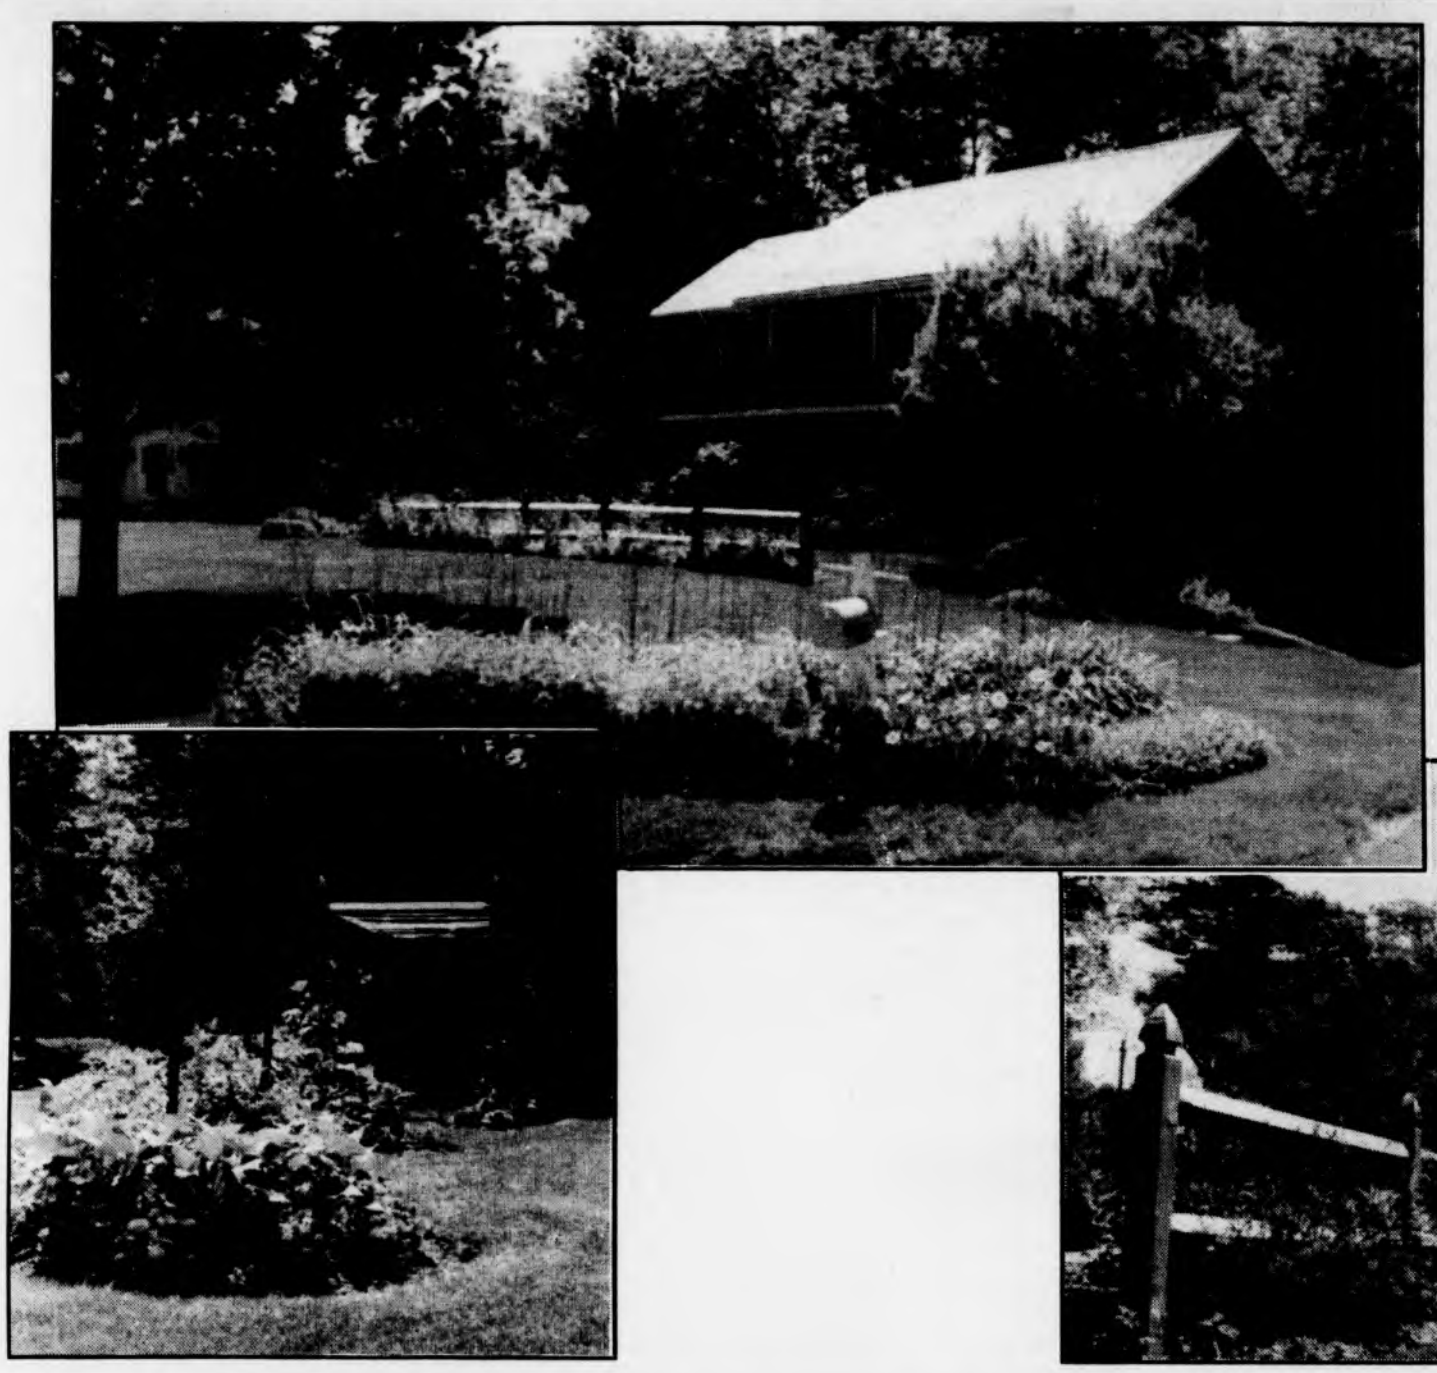
The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863



Anne and Dick Avery, 22 Surrey Dr., have created one of the most colorful and abundant perennial borders in Cohasset. By using a formal split-rail style fence as the center anchor, Sue and Dick have planted beds on either side curving to conform to the front brick path. Every imaginable color is represented — purple pincushion astilbe; stately deep purple, royal blue and pale blue delphiniums; pink astilbe; bright pink coneflower; pink, orange and yellow oriental lilies; bright yellow yarrow; Coral Bells; Bleeding Heart; blue Veronica with a soft drift of pale pink babies'- breath to soften the bed's edge. A shade garden to the left of the perennial border is home to a dogwood under planted with Hosta, ferns and deep magenta astilbe. Dick has recently finished building the latest addition to the garden — a pergola shading the birdbath, under planted with zinnias and bright yellow marigold. The mailbox is engulfed in an island of intense summertime color — deep yellow day lily, blue Lobelia, deep salmon-colored "Marina" rose, bright yellow Coreopsis, tall dark fuchsia flowered lamb's-ear with its furry grey leaves, back by orange oriental poppies and day lily. Two corner islands accent the front lot lines — these are filled with tall Shasta daisy, day lily, pink oriental poppy, white astilbe, lamb's-ear and variegated ornamental grasses. Be sure to view this garden in all its glory — this one is not to be missed! Many thanks to Anne and Dick for inviting the Grand Tour to photograph and share their labor of love.

Voters to decide new school site

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

Hoping to avoid a second special town meeting, selectmen decided to include an article in the Aug. 12 special town meeting warrant which moves the site of the new school.

The article proposes that the new school be built next to the Deer Hill School.

Selectmen had previously decided not to include the article because petitioners had missed the July 8 deadline.

However,petitioners maintained that they would gather the necessary 200 signatures to force the selectmen to call another special town meeting.

As the plans stand now, the new $9.9 million elementary school is to be located 500 feet behind the Deer Hill School.

Some abutters on Old Pasture Road, whose lot lines are approximately 140 feet from the new school site, say that the school is too close to their property.

In an emergency meeting Friday night, Selectman Roseanne McMorris said that although she supported the article's inclusion, she didn't believe that town meetings were an appropriate forum for every citizen concern.

"I am in hopes that people understand that this is not the way to run a good town," added Selectman Chairman Merle Brown, after he approved the addition of the article.

School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder and School Facilities Chairman Bob Beggan voiced their opposition to the board's decision.

"I ask you to rethink this," said Kidder. "To ask people to take the school and move it to

Noise impacts aired at tri-town train meeting

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

The complexity involved in understanding rail impacts became abundantly clear this week as representatives from Cohasset, Hingham, and Scituate met with MBTA consultants for a noise and vibration workshop.

Noise and vibration are considered two of the most adverse effects on homes and businesses that abut the 17.7-mile right-of-way for the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad.

While the $215 million rail restoration project has met with considerable opposition in several South Shore towns, mitigation committees have cropped up throughout the Greenbush corridor and have begun to work on finding ways to lessen the train's impact on area property owners.

Some of the towns have hired their own noise experts to help determine and debate the accuracy of the MBTA studies.

Mitigation committee members and rail liaisons from all three communities attended the meeting which was held Tuesday evening at the Lightkeeper's House in Cohasset.

While Chairman James Mullen of Cohasset's citizen mitigation committee raised several technical questions on noise, Conservation Commission member Michael Dick had concerns about the impact of noise and vibration on wetland habitats and

Osgood School renovation options weighed by officials

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

If the new school proposal is ultimately rejected, how much would it cost to keep Osgood School open?

At the school facilities meeting July 17, School Supt. Stephen Hart walked the audience of town board members and concerned citizens through several possible scenarios.

"These are not my recommendations," Hart cautioned. "Most of these are fraught with problems. They are a very illogical approach."

The positive school vote will be reconsidered at a special town meeting Aug. 12. A citizen petition with over 500 signatures spurred the town meeting.

At the July 17 meeting, the facilities committee voted unanimously to reaffirm their support of the new school.

Hart said that none of the Osgood options are state-funded. The state is funding 60 percent of the capital and interest costs of the new school.

Based on the median value of a house in Cohasset, which is $242,000, the cost for the new school would cost the taxpayer

Swimmers eclipse nine-year-old relay record

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

With the skill and depth of its team, the Cohasset Swim Team has been able to experiment with swimmers in different relays and events to get an idea who belongs where.

But after last Friday's victory over the Aqua-Dux of Duxbury, head coaches Allison Hughes and Becky Golden won't be juggling swimmers in and out of the 17-and-under girls 200-meter freestyle relay.

The team of Allison Berg, Gemma O'Brien, Kerry O'Hart and Sarah Harkness raced to a pool record time of 2:06.21, breaking the standard set back in 1987.

Hughes, for one, wasn't surprised by the record swim.

"Usually the relays win by a lot," she said. "These girls are all winter swimmers also."

Berg, O'Brien and O'Hart regularly competed together in the relay. Harkness joined the threesome in order for Hughes and Golden to get a look at how the squad would do as a team in a competitive meet. Harkness' times had been improving in her freestyle event and the two coaches believed she'd be a definite asset to the relay.

Although the group will stay together in the relay, Hughes said the individual members' workouts won't change. They'll continue to work on starts, but Hughes was quick to point out that part of the swim team's training is done by everyone on the roster.

Hughes wasn't overly concerned with a supposed moved by the Aqua-Dux to put together as strong a relay team as possible to challenge Cohasset at the All-League meet on August 10 at Wheaton College.

"It's definitely a concern," she said, "but we will have our fastest swimmers in the race. We'll just have to see what happens."

Cohasset's Week

Farmers' Market begins Aug. 1

The Village Farmers' Market, sponsored by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce through the efforts of the Village Revitalization Committee, will be held every Thurday evening from 4 to 8 p.m. beginning Aug. 1, and continue through Sept. 26.

The market will be held in the town parking area behind Cohasset Village and offer fruits, vegetables, herbs, fresh and dried flowers, plants, oils and vinegars, breads, and more from many vendors.

Internationally known Irish instrumentalists Tommy McCarthy on fiddle and Louise Costell on banjo and accordian will be on stage in the market area from 5 to 7 p.m. These musicians recently joined The Chieftans on stage at Harborlights.

Planners approve walkway, dock

The planning board last week unanimously endorsed a proposal by Dr. Ruth Kirschner-Hermanns and her husband, Norbert, for a walkway and dock leading from their Howard Gleason Road home, off of Atlantic Avenue, out into Cohasset Harbor.

The four-foot wide, 270-foot long walkway would be constructed over and through what is presently marsh area, past the inter-tidal zone and finish out in the harbor. The actual boat docking facility would be 12-feet wide by 48-feet long.

The Hermannses, who live in the area of the Cohasset Yacht Club, have a 43-foot boat they would moor adjacent to their home.

Chairman Al Moore told Mr. Hermanns the planning board would forward its approval for the project to the town's board.

In their only other piece of business, board members provisionally approved the appointment of fellow member Robert Sturdy to the town's Private Way Committee.

Sturdy, who was not present for the board session, would have to accept the appointment.

With many town committees on a shortened summer schedule, the next session of the planning board will be Wednesday, Aug. 14, at 8 p.m. in town hall.

Lobster bill approved

The state Senate approved this week a compromised version of a bill which limits the daily allowable catch of lobsters by draggermen to 100.

The bill was delivered to the Governor for his signature. The original bill passed by the Senate would have limited the allowable catch to 50 lobsters per day due to a substitute bill offered by Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth).

The House version originally provided for a 150 daily limit on lobsters.

After weeks of negotiating and discussions with the leadership of the Scituate-based Massachusetts Lobsterman's Association, a compromise was reached and the limit was set at 100. Hedlund accepted this compromise and said it would be a good first step in protecting the valuable lobster stock and in the best interest of the lobstermen. "Many of these men and women are having their livelihoods challenged on a daily basis. This limit is the start of a program that will protect the vital resources beneath the ocean surface, and also protect the careers of many hard-working people," Hedlund said. This compromise has the support of the Massachusetts Lobsterman's Association, who worked with Hedlund in preparing the original language.

Hedlund backs Title V tax credit

Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, sponsored an amendment that was one vote shy of having a tax credit for Title V reach the Governor for his expected signature. Hedlund offered an amendment that would have provided a 40 percent tax credit for Title V repairs, up to a maximum of $6,000. Hedlund's amendment failed by a vote of 18-19.

"The time should have been right for a victory, since today's discussions included refunding the taxpayers a $150 million state surplus and giving mutual fund companies a $40 million tax break. A tax credit would have provided more equitable means to provide relief to impacted homeowners and provide them with real money in their pockets instead of debt for a home they no longer own, like the low-interest loan program would do," Hedlund said.

"I believed giving homeowners relief from Title V, while providing savings for the state by eliminating an ineffective $13 million loan program, would be an easy vote. But I faced 'Murderer's Row,' with Senate leadership twisting arms to get their votes," said Hedlund.

"The Senate Chair of Ways & Means pledged to meet me within the week to change the low-interest loan program criteria to allow South Shore towns, like Scituate, Marshfield, Cohasset, Hingham and Duxbury to qualify. He promised to use the conference committee as a vehicle to change the program for the benefit of towns who didn't qualify for this program," Hedlund concluded.

Aug. 2 last day to register to vote

The last day to register to vote in the Special Town Meeting on Monday, Aug. 12, is Friday, Aug. 2.

The Board of Registrars of Voters will be in session at the Town Clerk's office from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Registration forms also are available at the Cohasset Post Office and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. These forms may be mailed or hand-delivered to the clerk's office, but must be received or postmarked on or before August 2, 1996.

Voter to decide school site the other side of the hill and put it on top of a rock and a flag pole: this is 11-hour craziness."

Beggan added that the proposed site puts the school 40 feet from a different set of residents. "Don't you think they will want their own special town meeting?" he asked.

Jill O'Donnell, a resident of Old Pasture Road and a proponent of the article, said that she wasn't only supporting the article to move the school further from her home.

"I honestly feel it is a better site. It is lighter and there are less wetlands," she said.

There are six articles on the warrant.

Selectman Peter Pratt said at this point essentially all of the citizen petitions are flawed.

"All three may be cured with properly crafted (language) on the floor of town meeting," he added.

Warrant order changes

The order of the warrant was changed after North Cohasset sewer hookup proponent Maria LaPlante said it put her group's article at a disadvantage.

North Cohasset residents submitted an article, Article 3, that asks town meeting to reconsider its March 30 vote which supported a $6.3 million sewer project.

The project would connect North Cohasset to the treatment plant in Hull.

Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild submitted an article, Article 2, which would authorize the town to make $500,000 in subsidized loans available at below market rates for residents who need septic system repairs.

LaPlante said that if Guild's article was placed first, it would further divide the town and undercut the support for her group's article.

The selectmen decided to switch the order of the two articles.

Selectman Peter Pratt said that the purpose of Guild's article was to gather support for the sewer projects by showing septic system owners that their needs were being addressed as well.

An override representing half of the cost of sewering 345 homes in North Cohasset failed at the ballot box on May 4.

North Cohasset residents are concerned that they will bear the entire cost of the project over the 20-year pay period.

Selectmen earlier voted unanimously to go on record that they expect to combine the Central Cohasset sewer expansion override and the North Cohasset sewer project override in a single Proposition 2 1/2 override question when the Central Cohasset project is brought before town meeting– probably next spring.

LaPlante said that the North Cohasset project would have already begun by then, and if the selectmen's plans go awry or the article is postponed, North Cohasset residents will end up paying the total cost.

Her group believes that the North Cohasset project should be postponed and that all the sewer projects should be undertaken simultaneously.

Pratt said that the board signed a court agreement which mandates, under penalty of fines, that the town start sewer repairs.

Since the central project is delayed due to harbor testing, he said, this is the project that should go forward.

June DPW constuction project completed

The following Cohasset Department of Public Works projects were completed in June, according to Superintendent Harold W. Litchfield:

Osgood School renovation options weighed approximately $205 a year until state reimbursement begins in three or four years.

The cost would then drop to $95 a year.

The town would get additional money from the state after the 20-year bond is paid for (to make up for the lag time in state payments.)

Because Osgood sits on such a small site, Hart said that the department may have to purchase an additional acre of land for parking and drop-off.

The land would have to be purchased by eminent domain.

Hart said students now play on the same asphalt that buses and cars use.

The least expensive Osgood option would cost $3.9 million. This option doesn't include land purchase.

The cost of the new school, after state reimbursement, most closely matches this figure.

"It is the same $4 million," said Hart.

Some audience members questioned the administration's figures.

Hart replied that the cost of the options was determined by professional engineers.

Town Accountant Michael Buckley figured out the effect the projects would have on the tax rate.

It would initially cost Cohasset taxpayers $130 a year if $3.9 million worth of work is done to Osgood, which Hart describes as a minimal option. The cost would then drop to $96.

This option includes partial rehabilitation of the school, which would basically make it safe, said school officials.

In order to gain additional classrooms, which are necessary to meet the needs of a growing population, portable classrooms would have to be purchased.

"They are basically mobile homes," said architect Sid Bowen.

The option does not include an additional $554,000, which is the amount that would be spent by the school architects by Aug. 12.

The architect's fee (which is included in the cost of the new school) is figured into the tax rate.

Advisory Board Member Lee Jenkins suggested stopping the project now, until Aug. 12, to save the town money on architectural costs.

School Facilities Member Robert Spofford saidhe already got his direction from the community and wants to move forward.

It is estimated that the architects would do $100,000 worth of work between mid-July and Aug. 12.

Another option Hart suggested would cost $5.9 million, which would increase taxes by $179 a year. The figure would then drop to approximately $100.

In this scenario, Osgood would be partially rehabilitated and an addition would take the place of portable classrooms. A total of 24 classrooms are needed; there are 13 available now.

The three classrooms in the middle of the building would be turned into a gymnasium/cafeteria/ auditorium.

Hart said that although the gym is preferable to the small play area students have now, the location isn't ideal because it borders classrooms and the noise could be distracting.

The faculty room would be moved from the attic to a lower level.

If Osgood was completely rehabilitated, up to state standards, Hart said that it would cost $7.68 million.

This option doesn't include acquisition of land. It does include the enlargement of classrooms and an addition to the school.

Hart said that even with the new acre, Osgood is only 60 percent of the triangular site of the new school and 38 percent of the entire 13-acre site, which includes nature trails and the vernal pool.

Architect Sid Bowen said that there was a fourth option. He said Cohasset could "accept their lot and do nothing."

If the town didn't provide for educational programs, he said, and just put the students in a building it would cost $2.9 million. This includes portables, more furniture, and basic wiring and other repairs.

This option would not comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act, a federal law, so the town does run the risk of being sued, Bowen said.

Hart said that there would be no accessibility to any levels except for the ground floor.

Officials said that the options have less than a 50-year life span, which the new school has.

If the town loses its spot on the state list for reimbursement, the wait for state funding could increase two-fold or more, say officials.

Hart said that if the Osgood property is left on the tax rolls, it could make money for the town.

"I could be dramatic and say that the (Osgood property) would pay for the cost of the school," said Hart.

Hart and Bowen also addressed some of the concerns the advisory board had with the new school, including the sewering.

Bowen said that the school would be hooked up to the sewer line before it opened. There had been some question in the past that the area wouldn't be sewered until a later date.

Traffic patterns and the lighting in the building will be further looked into, said School Facilities Committee Chairman Bob Beggan.

Her most recent work focuses on transformation and regeneration, the vehicle for change being one of the four elements —earth, water, fire and air.

Roberts, a graduate of Rhode Island School of Design, has exhibited nationally, and her paintings have won numerous awards in Massachusetts and other states.

Noise impacts aired at tri-town train meeting

wildlife.

MBTA Environmental Manager Andrew Brennan asked the assembled group to consider the meeting as "a noise tutorial," focusing on how noise is measured, what standards are applied and what regulatory hurdles the MBTA must cross in designing the Greenbush project.

"We felt it was important to give everyone a good level of understanding on noise issues," Brennan said.

"This is critical information to have in order to make informed decisions and come to informed conclusions on this," he added.

In a series of on-going meetings with the MBTA, Brennan said he will work together with individual towns to tackle mitigation impacts at specific grade crossings and intersections along the line.

Carl Hanson, an accoustical engineer and principal in the noise consulting firm Harris, Miller, Miller and Hanson, led the workshop and guided the group through a hand-out full of charts, graphs and complicated logarithmic equations measuring existing or "ambiant" noise levels as well as the noise impact commuter rail will have on surrounding properties.

The addition of these two noise levels shows planners what institutes "no impact," an "impact" or a "severe impact" on a home or business. Mitigation measures like noise walls, new windows, insulation and airconditioning must be implemented if a property is severely impacted, Hanson said.

If your home or buisness falls along the "impact" curve, mitigation measures must be considered, and if feasible implemented. In areas where no impact is determined, no mitigation is required, he said.

In very technical terms, Hanson explained how engineers determine the maximum noise level (Lmax) of the train as well as the day-night sound level (Ldn) the total sound energy emitted by the train averaged over a 24-hour period. Mitigation measures are designed for the maximum noise levels, Hanson noted.

Hanson, who has worked as a noise consultant on the Old Colony project for 10 years, explained that while noise studies and standards used for the Middleboro and Plymouth Old Colony lines pre-date the recent Federal Transit Administration handbook of noise guidelines released in September, the new, stricter standards will be applied on the Greenbush spur.

Hanson, in fact helped develop the new handbook which Brennan said is considered "the Bible of noise for transit planners."

Hanson also discussed in general terms how noise walls and natural barriers work to buffer the noise of the train and how rubber mats below the tracks can help lessen the vibrations.

With two noise sources on a diesel locomotive – the wheels and the diesel engine exhaust – completely blocking noise will be difficult, said Hanson, who noted that with the exhaust noise source at 13-1/2 feet "not much except buildings and houses are high enough to shield that noise."

On the other hand, Hanson said a noise wall only four-feet high could block the sound of the wheels. What the wall is made of - brick, wood or concrete – makes little difference as long as it is solid, has no gaps and can withstand wind and other elements.

While complicated and technical, the workshop was planned to lay the ground work for the more detailed and specific mitigation negotiations ahead, Brennan said.

"We want to walk with you though this process," he said.

For anyone who missed Tuesday's meeting, Brennan said the same workshop will be held for Weymouth and Braintree residents tonight (July 25) at the South Shore Chamber of Commerce in Quincy starting a 7 p.m.

Earn Deer Hill School summer reading credits

In an effort to encourage summer reading, the faculty at the Deer Hill School has developed a plan.

Next September, in each corridor of Deer Hill, there will be a section called the "Read" wall. This wall will be covered from ceiling to floor with a piece of red paper,. The children will attach index cards, which will be color-coded for each grade level. T he card will show their name and books read during the summer. Each index card will list the titles of five books they have read and will be worth 100 points toward their class' Merit Award. These same five books can also be used for credit in the Paul Pratt Library Summer Reading Program, "Catch the Summer Spark, Read!"

Experience has shown that reading is a basic ingredient for success in school and summer is an ideal time to expand that skill and have fun doing it.

A safe summer

Unfortunately, last week's news in Randolph about an unprovoked pit bull attack and an apparent drowning in a Foxboro camp show the potential pitfalls of the warm weather.

After an unforgettable winter, we were so happy to hear that summer's here. School's out and so are the kids.

They're bike riding, rollerblading, splashing in pools. Fun activities - as long as parents take a few precautions.

Summer can mean long sunny days for kids, but it also means long, busy nights for pediatric emergency medicine staff.

"When kids go unsupervised, their chances go way up for drownings, broken bones and head trauma from bike and skating accidents," noted Mariann Manno M.D. director of pediatric emergency medicine at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester.

"More children die or are seriously injured as a result of accidents than any other cause," noted Dr. Manno. The fact, many of these accidents are preventable." Bike helmets top the list of smart moves for kids. Bike helmets can reduce the risk of head injuries as much as 85 percent, according tot he National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

The new bike helmet in law in this state requires all children under 12 years old to war a helmet while riding a bike.

After a long, hot bike ride, backyard swimming pools can look very attractive. Yet they pose another serious hazard for children. Kids should be closely supervised around the water. They should not be left alone for a moment around a pool, not even to run inside to answer the phone.

On a hot summer night, many parents open the windows in their kids' rooms. Open windows lead to falls which are a major source of injury to small children in warm weather.

It's important for parents to teach their children traffic safety, while on their bikes and as pedestrians. Drivers should always be on the lookout for kids darting out into the streets.

Summertime also means more time in the car for kids, who willingly or unwillingly accompany their parents on errands or shopping trips.

There's the temptation, when you are rushed and it's only a couple of blocks to the convenience store, not to hassle with seat belts or a car seat.

But short rides in the car can be just as hazardous as long trips. Seat belts for children are a must, even if you're only going around the corner.

Please make it a safe and happy summer for you and your children.

Education has changed here since the '60s & '70s

To the Editor:

I have lived in Cohasset for more than 25 years, attending all the schools from 1960 to 1973. The educational experience provided to me in our schools was excellent. When my wife, Shelly, and I moved back to Cohasset from England, we looked forward to the opportunity of raising our family in this wonderful community. Clearly schools were an important aspect of relocating here, and I was thrilled that my children would attend the same schools I attended.

When I first heard about the idea of building a new school, I was against it. After all, my class, the class of '73 was one of the largest ever, and we seemed fine at Osgood.

However, having spent time as a volunteer, and attending several parent-teacher meetings at Osgood over the last two years, there is no question in my mind that we need the proposed new school.

Education has changed since my days at Osgood. Today the classroom itself is often split into several working groups during the course of the day, requiring ample space for a few teachers to work concurrently with these groups. These "inclusion" groups did not exist in the '60s. Today's curriculum is more varied; for example, computer education is a must, and didn't exist in my day.

I've worked in the Osgood's computer room, tucked away down in the basement in a confined and unsafe place (relative to evacuation).

When you cut to the core, the opponents of the new school have only one problem – they do not want to see higher taxes because of it. Yet, they raise any issue they can think of to deter the proposed school, besides their true main reason.

It seems that this core issue of taxes is not very well understood as well. We know that minimally we are looking at a significant investment in renovating the Osgood if the new proposed school is not pursued. When the figures are evaluated for both options, the resulting difference between the tax cost for a new school versus a renovation of Osgood, is minimal if any.

Despite my sentimental feelings about the Osgood School, our children and their children require a new school that is contemporary with the requirements of education today.

As Dr. Sceery so aptly stated at this past spring's town meeting, "vote with your head and your heart (in favor of a new school)."

If project is important, let's do it right

To the Editor:

The controversy surrounding the proposed new Cohasset grade school makes one wonder.

The chairman of the School Committee says that "our 5- to 7-year-olds are forced to spend more than five hours of their lives in one of the oldest, most inadequate school buildings in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts." Why was it allowed to become that bad?

It's interesting to note that a few Cohasset children were sent to the charter school in Hull this past year and that quite a few more are enrolled for the coming year. That school will be housed in a modified restaurant.

We witnessed a film at the 1996 Annual Town Meeting showing boxes of supplies crowded into work areas. No other storage space in town? Careless housekeeping? Inept management?

Haste seems to be the hallmark of this project, together with a lack of shared information. The Capital Budget Committee seems to have been late to become aware; the Design Review Board was apparently put off; the town as a whole seems not to have been made fully aware of the magnitude of the project.

These things are understandable in the light of deadlines, money pressures, and the excitement and enthusiasm that goes with a building project.

The people already involved tend to think that everyone is in the know and are as keen about it as they, and are amazed that the average citizen-taxpayer is surprised by it.

Despite the generous guarantees of its fees by private citizens, the architect's plans were incomplete at the time of the state's filing deadline. The design review board, when finally informed, called attention to a possible conflict of interest as well as problems experienced by other towns with this architect, problems that the Facilities Committee either excused or was unaware of. These included cost overruns. (The architect has suggested that our project will remain within the budget.)

The site chosen belongs to the town and appears to be assessed to be cost-free. Not so; it's money in the bank, and it will become money spent and therefore part of the cost. It has real money value; ask any developer.

Despite the fact that roughly 10 percent of the town's electorate voted overwhelmingly for the new school at the annual meeting, the burden of paying lies upon all of the citizen-taxpayers who generally can be relied upon to make reasoned and reasonable decisions.

Like the fabled old man who planted a fruit tree to benefit future generations, even taxpaying octogenarians cherish children, for in them they see the future, and they like to dream of helping to craft a better world.

Our having spent a lot of money, time and effort seems a compelling reason to maintain momentum and stay the course. But we will be spending an awful lot of additional money, time and effort from here on to be paid out over 20 years and lived with for at least double that.

Have not enough questions been raised to justify a review, even at substantial additional cost, rather than risk sending good money after bad?

If this project is as important as we think, it's worth doing right and knowing that it is right. Sheer determination may secure a new school; it will not assure a wise choice.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Selectmen should not forget about Greenbush

Dear Selectmen,

Over the past several months I have been reading dozens of articles in the local papers concerning our town's fight against CHL expansion and the need to build a new elementary school and expand our sewer system.

I fully understand and support our town spending time and money on these very important issues. What I do not understand is why a similar effort has not been devoted to studying the Greenbush train's effect on our town. Forming a mitigation committee isn't going to cut it.

Whether or not the individuals serving on this committee are for or against Greenbush, they are neither experts on this issue nor should they be looked upon by the MBTA as spokesmen for our town.

Speak to Abington selectmen and residents and see how successful their mitigation efforts were with the MBTA. The MBTA "talks" mitigation to pacify towns but they seldom follow through with their promises.

Please do not be naive enough to think it will be different in Cohasset.

I know Greenbush is a very controversial issue due to the lack of public transportation alternatives on the South Shore. I worked in Boston for 10 years and I know firsthand how aggravating it is to sit in traffic on routes 3 and 3A.

But from the mouths of the MBTA comes the following:

From Route 3A, "890 a.m. peak-period auto trips would be removed daily and an additional 440 would be removed from Route 3 and the Southeast Expressway." An estimated 38,000 use Route 3A and 67,000 use Route 3 during this same time.

With respect to how Greenbush would impact commuting congestion on our highways, "In the aggregate there would be no more than a marginal change in highway traffic volume."

(Source: Draft of the Environmental Impact Report — copy at the Pratt Library)

If the MBTA states Greenbush will not have a material impact on highway traffic volumes then why is our state prepared to spend an estimated $215 to $300 million to build this rail line? I know this is not a question you can answer but as leaders of our town, why aren't you urging our local and state politicians to explore public transportation alternatives that are solutions and not just financial burdens?

I am distressed to read in the draft of the Environmental Impact Report that the MBTA can lease the Greenbush tracks to freight companies during non-commuting hours. When Andrew Brendan of the MBTA was asked this very question during his meeting with Cohasset selectmen, he could not confirm or deny that this would or would not happen on Greenbush tracks. That makes me more than a little bit nervous since ticket sales and town assessments are not expected to cover Greenbush's estimated $20 million annual operating cost.

If Cohasset were to lose the fight against CHL expansion what would stop a trash company from leasing Greenbush tracks to haul waste to CHL?

In closing, my purpose of writing you this letter is to urge you not to forget about Greenbush during a time in which our town is immersed in several costly issues.

Do not concede that Greenbush is coming because despite what our politicians and the media may say the MBTA has many hurdles yet to clear. Please take a moment and take a ride to Abington and see the impact the MBTA is having on that town or carefully reread the literature you received from the Coastal Coalition when they made their presentation at the June selectmen's meeting.

I am confident that once you study the FACTS you will come to the conclusion that regardless of where you live, everyone in Cohasset will be negatively impacted by this train.

I know the special vote held on Greenbush was very close but I can guarantee you that if this train comes through our town, residents will be yelling and screaming, "Why didn't you do anything to stop this train?" Do you want to live in infamy as the selectmen who allowed Greenbush into Cohasset without so much as a fight?

Thank you for taking the time to read this letter.

Current facility is major hindrance to a quality education

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to several recent comments in your newspaper regarding the new elementary school building project.

We agree with Alexander C. Koines (Mariner, July 18, 1996) that "competition improves products in the marketplace and concerns and constructive criticism will improve Cohasset's new primary school."

Indeed, citizen comments and suggestions at four town meetings (all of which overwhelmingly supported the new school) and more than 100 public meetings of the School Facilities/Building Committee, the School Committee, the Board of Selectmen, the Conservation Commission, the Design Review Board and others have shaped and re-shaped the new school project.

In fact, the project continues to evolve even now, with citizen input at every turn.

Far from expecting the citizens of Cohasset "to simply be quiet and take what they are given," elected and appointed town officials – your own neighbors, friends and fellow taxpayers – have made this arguably the most openly debated public works project in the history of the town.

While we have consistently opposed the efforts of some residents whose only intention is to kill the project by whatever means they find useful at the moment, we have just as consistently sought – and acted on – the wise counsel of a much larger group of citizens whose expertise, genuine concerns and constructive suggestions have made this a much better project. We continue to seek such involvement.

On the other hand, we must respectfully disagree with the comments of Florence Jerome (Mariner, July 18, 1996). Constructing an elementary school is never simply "a monumental building project." In the case of this particular primary school, we are certainly grappling with both an educational issue and a moral issue.

The educational issue is simple to explain. We agree that "buildings alone cannot improve our children's education." The current Osgood School, however, is a major hindrance to our children's education. Classrooms are crowded and far below minimum standards.

The library and the computer lab, ordinarily hallmarks of an adequate educational facility, are squeezed into the basement, are much too small and have inadequate ventilation. The building is not accessible to persons with disabilities. There is no cafeteria, gymnasium or space for performing arts. Most of the mechanical and electrical systems do not meet current codes. The building's deficiencies create an educational issue because the educational process is now, and will continue to be, negatively impacted. We are asking our professional staff to provide twenty-first century education in a building designed and constructed to meet the needs of children in the 1920s.

The building of our new elementary school is also a moral issue. Each prior generation of Americans has seen fit to make sacrifices for their children and the generations to follow. But no new school building project has occurred in Cohasset for more than 40 years.

The need for a new elementary school to replace the Osgood was first identified more than 25 years ago through a comprehensive investigation similar to the one in which we have been engaged. At that time our town chose not to replace the Osgood, but to make due with what even then was an inadequate facility. We believe that continuing to house very young children in a facility that denies them the best education this town can provide is shortsighted from every perspective.

We again encourage you to attend town meeting Aug. 12 and to reaffirm the commitment this town has made to build a new elementary school for our children. Not because we say so, but because it's the right thing to do.

Vote 'No' to the reconsideration vote

To the Editor:

Though site issues have brought us back to town meeting for a vote on the new school, the original issues of overcrowding, safety and educational standards have not changed.

In less than six weeks, Cohasset's elementary students will return to school. Regrettably, the Pre-K collaborative will be housed at the Jr/Sr high, and our kindergartners must attend Deer Hill in classes of up to 28 children.

Osgood will house first- through third-graders, though the fire chief still views the school as a "lethal combination of fire hazards."

As to educational standards, the children will still be in undersized classrooms which double as their eating space and also lack a full-size gym, auditorium and classroom computers, to name a few of the educational inadequacies.

Given all of the above and the precedent of two overwhelming majority votes at previous town meetings, few among us are likely to still argue with the need for a new school. The questions instead are 1) "should we build new or renovate?" and 2) "are we getting the best school for our money?" In answer to these:

Though any number of renovation plans can be drawn up and "costed," the lack of state reimbursement on any such project makes these options cost prohibitive. Cohasset would spend 100 percent to Band-Aid an ailing building. The cost of maintaining the renovated Osgood would remain high. Moreover, the inadequate parking and playspace as well as the unsafe traffic conditions would not be improved. It is far wiser to spend just 40 cents on the dollar for a safer, larger, improved facility built for education in the 21st century.

Regarding the best use of our money ... The new school will be approximately 60 percent larger than Osgood, provide classroom sizes of 900 sq. ft. on average (vs. 680 sq. ft. now), and double the acreage from four to eight acres. Parking will be increased and the traffic congestion that we live with at the Osgood will be greatly improved.

The school will be wired for in-class computers as well as a lab, have a full-size gym and a cafeteria. Of course, it will be handicap accessible and comply with ADA requirements. Reasonably, none of these are far-fetched wishes for our children and the town's school. They are basic needs.

The questions concerning the site are being addressed by the school facilities committee at their frequent meetings. They are meeting with the design review board, the conservation commission, the abutters, selectmen, the capital budget committee and others.

The site was chosen because it was the best space available for the price. It is topographically superior to other, more expensive options. The school facilities committee is not looking at this for the first time. They have done exhaustive research which has been presented to us already.

Let us all get back to the basic issues that compelled us to vote for the new school in the two previous town meetings. Be sure to be there Aug. 12. We need you to vote no to the reconsideration.

To stop the school project will result in gridlock

Dear Cohasset resident:

Based on: a 155 percent water rate increase, 25 percent property assessment increase, 100 percent sewage betterment vote, the new school project, landfill capping, Hagerty Property acquisition, new DPW garage, new ballfield, etc.; the cost to live on my street (Windy Hill Road) will double during the next three years.

It is part of the 11 miles of private ways, in Cohasset, that are disintegrating due to lack of repaving funds. The last abatement increase for Cohasset's 45 disabled veterans was during 1939, yes 1939.

The selectmen, planning board and various responsible town committees have failed abysmally to put together long-term budget projections and a Master Plan. It is inexcusable that a $10 to $14 school project was not on the 1995 Capital Budget Plan. We are constantly asked to vote spending articles based on incomplete and inaccurate information.

Prior to the January Special Town Meeting, I went to the proposed site for the new Osgood School, and concluded that the School Facilities Committee Plan inadequate. At the town meeting, 500 flyers were distributed suggesting a preferable alternative. It acknowledged that the Osgood School needed replacement at a new location. However, it suggested that an addition to the Deer Hill School, making it PK-6, was preferable to the school's proposal. PK-6 is probably the most common elementary school grade range in Massachusetts.

The school facilities committee acknowledged that construction costs for a Deer Hill expansion would be $1M less than their proposal. I pointed out that we could avoid a duplication of common use facilities such as gymnasiums, cafeterias, and libraries(to name only a few). Over the 50-year projected life, overhead, staffing and maintenance costs would also be substantially less.

The school administration has argued that a separate PK-3 school is necessary for quality education. That is not true and it is a luxury considering other financial pressures. Despite major "damage control" concessions by the conservation commission and other boards; expansion of the Deer Hill School remains the most cost-effective alternative.

Even if the current $554,000 in "sunk" engineering costs are written-off; a PK-6 alternative offers quality education at less cost. Remember, considerable space can be "freed-up" at the Deer Hill with the pending sewage hookup, and relocation of parking and playing fields to the "back forty."

The currently proposed location of the new school is so close to the Deer Hill that the school administration's objective of separateness; albeit unjustified, is not accomplished. It also entails a very costly second line sewage hook-up.

It is understandable that parents, the PSO, school committee and related organizations are strongly committed to the current plan. Perhaps so committed that emotions sometimes override logic.

I urge you to continue to accept constructive criticism and not repudiate all those who disagree as "anti-education." The Town of Cohasset has many major concerns. In particular, I do not want to see a repeat of what is happening with the DPW garage which is being downsized to keep within budget.

I am already hearing discussions about school cost cutting measures such as compromises on quality materials(brick, copper, concrete etc.) to less maintenance free alternatives. The architect has publicly said that cost considerations will (quote) "result in more trade-offs than we'd like"(end quote). Let's not be penny wise and pound foolish. Maintenance is not a strong point with either the schools or the town. We deserve to know what "trade-offs" are in the offing. Let's assure that cosmetics, not quality construction, will get the ax. If we can't bring the project in at or below cost; we need to know that.

I am also concerned that both the Deer Hill School and the high school have an extensive list of backlogged maintenance needs that are not in the town's budget. I insist that the selectmen, school committee, and related departments identify those pending significant costs.

Despite all the concerns that I have enumerated; I very reluctantly urge you to support continuance of the school project with the aforementioned provisos. I believe that to stop the project now will result in gridlock, a failure to address serious Osgood School problems, probable lawsuits and a loss of 60 percent state funding.

What is town's commitment to the future of education?

To the Editor:

When our family moved back to the South Shore we chose Cohasset, not only for its beauty but because of the quality of the school system. I was pleased to find all Cohasset K-3 children attended the quaint Osgood School and, at first, did not see a need to replace the school. Over the last six years, I have volunteered in many areas at the Osgood School. I have worked with the teachers and support staff and have spent many hours in the Osgood building. The caring teachers and support staff provide excellent educational opportunities for our children. The same cannot be said for the building.

The additions made to the Osgood are numerous: the creation of a computer lab, the expansion of the library, a publishing center in the attic and offices for the staff in the basement.

Although each of these projects was well done, maximizing the limited space available, they are still cramped, windowless rooms with severe safety issues. The corridor through which the children leave the computer lab and library is three-feet wide. The thought of 25 frightened children exiting in an emergency should frighten us all!

This year the kindergarten was moved out of the Osgood because there was simply not enough room for one more classroom. The decision to move the kindergarten was made by the administration and supported by the Osgood School Council. Mrs. Moody and Mrs. Price will continue to provide quality education to Cohasset's children.

Extensive efforts have been made to minimize the disruption, but this move is not without costs – time lost through transporting support staff and supplies between the Osgood and Deer Hill and replication of playground equipment to name a few. This temporary solution to the space problem should not become a permanent one.

Every town requires its residents to pay taxes; not every town has had the commitment to and quality of education we enjoy. To deny that the quality of the schools does not add greatly to all property values in Cohasset is naive.

If I were to be looking at South Shore communities and found that Cohasset chose to spend a million dollars to renovate a 70-year-old building to meet minimum mandatory requirements, rather than use town owned land and state funds to build a school that would not only meet the needs of today's children but also future generations, I would question the town's commitment to public education.

I would also question the town's commitment to its future.

Municipal sewer project must be treated as one project

To the Editor:

It is critical at this time to inform the residents of the town of Cohasset, the reason for the Citizen's Petition asking the voters of the town to reconsider the vote of the Special Town Meeting held March 30, to borrow the sum of $6,326,800 for the construction of a sewer project in the Strait's Pond/Hull Street area.

The majority of the 345 residents in this area do not address this issue as sewer vs. non-sewer. We are one town, working together, in the best interest of all its residents to solve a critical problem.

When the Board of Sewer Commissioners adopted their original article (Article 4 — Special Town Meeting — 3/30/96) asking for 100 percent funding from less than six percent of the town's homeowners, we were grateful for the unanimous support at town meeting for an amendment to Article 4 sharing the cost 50/50.

When Cohasset's sewer treatment plant was constructed almost 30 years ago, there was no question that 100 percent of the cost was shared by every taxpayer, even though the benefit of this plant included few homeowners. Since this time, there have been economic changes and Title V mandates, so we felt the shared costs (50 percent paid by the town and 50 percent paid by the users) are not unreasonable.

All taxpayers have been burdened with the operation and maintenance costs of the present plant since 1968. Expenses each year far exceed the revenues, and the total amount of $2,068,853 from general revenue has been used to supplement the central sewer plant.

When the ballot election of May 4 to support the 50/50 cost of the new sewer project did not pass, we looked to our town officials for guidance.

Our hopes are to have the entire sewer project treated as one municipal project — (Phase I — the Strait's Pond/Hull Street area — Phase II — the Central/Hillside area — and a component part for the non-sewered residents). The Board of Sewer Commissioners promised to act in good faith in assisting us, but it appears that this board is further dividing the town of Cohasset. It is imperative to inform the citizens of Cohasset that the aAmended final judgment from the Superior Court does not document the mandate of the Strait's Pond/Hull Street as priority one.

The mandated areas are Cohasset Harbor — Little Harbor — and James Brook. Violation of this court order is against the entire town, and in fairness to all the taxpayers in Cohasset, the municipal sewer project must be treated as one!

School debate topics outlined for local cable program

The following letter was sent to Wigmore Pierson of the local cable channel)

Dear Wig:

On behalf of the Cohasset School Committee, I have been authorized to accept the precondition requested by Mr. Roy Fitzsimmons enjoining Steve Hart from appearing on the Aug. 4 debate you are sponsoring on Pierson-to-Person.

While we are all appalled by Mr. Fitzsimmons' behavior in this case, we feel it is essential that the people of Cohasset be given another opportunity to hear the facts about the new elementary school building project.

Consequently, our debate team will consist of Maureen Jerz, vice-chairman of the Cohasset School Committee, David Chase (or his alternate) from the School Facilities/Building Committee, Sid Bowen of Earl Flansburgh (our architects) and me.

At your request, we suggest the following topics for the debate:

The history of the project. Questions could include how the project came about, who has been involved in it, the four town meetings that have reviewed it and other such questions that will provide background and context for the voters.

How were the architects chosen? Questions here would be aimed at establishing the credentials of the consultants, the process by which they were chosen and could include items from the recent Design Review Board meetings.

How was the site selected? Questions here would center on the process by which the current site was selected, why other sites were rejected and what, if any, problems still must be resolved. You could include questions that have been raised by the abutters in this segment.

Why can't we just recycle the old Osgood School? Questions here might include: is the enrollment problem real? in what ways, if any, is the present Osgood inadequate? are the safety problems real? so what about state aid, anyway?

What motivates the proponents and the opponents? Questions here would center on why each side has taken the position it has and what each side hopes to gain, that is, what is the ultimate goal in each case.

Is there an alternative to building a new school? Questions here would be aimed at establishing or debunking any or all proposed alternatives to building a new school, including financial considerations.

So what will this new school cost me? Here you would attempt to clarify the actual costs of the project, their impact on taxpayers, and the costs of any alternative proposals.

I also want to confirm the format for this debate. As I understand our agreement, there will be opening and closing remarks by each side We hope you will consider giving us the last closing remarks, given our accommodation of Mr. Fitzsimmons' request, but we will live with the original agreement to determine order of speaking by lots if necessary.

There will be segments of about 15 minutes each on the topics which we and Mr. Fitzsimmons' group have provided you, plus, I presume, any that the reporters present see fit to address. There also will be two break periods where the proponents will be able to ask questions of the opponents directly, and vice versa. There will be no audience in the studio and you doubt whether you will take calls from the viewing audience, although at our last conversation this was not settled.

We are open to taking calls if you think this best. We are pleased with the proposed format, because we believe it will provide the voters of Cohasset with an excellent opportunity to understand the real issues associated with providing a new elementary school for Cohasset's youngest children.

I again want to express the outrage of the School Committee that Mr. Fitzsimmons has demanded as a precondition to appearing on your show the right to help us choose our team. But this project is of such importance that we are willing to take the high moral ground here and accept Mr. Fitzsimmons' demand rather than risk scuttling the entire debate.

Thanks for your efforts in putting together this timely show. I look forward to being with you Aug. 4.

Carr looks to '97 season

Three-win summer showcased Legion's talent

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

There was just one occasion all season when Cohasset American Legion baseball coach John Carr remembered his team being blown out early without a chance of coming back.

The rest of the time was completely different as the 3-17 squad had its problem holding onto late-inning leagues.

Cohasset led Canton 4-0 after six innings and wound up on the losing end, 6-5. Twice the locals dropped close 4-2 decisions to a strong Morrisette Post team. And against Weymouth and its four Boston Globe All-Scholastics, Cohasset gave the powerful club a strong run, before falling short, 10-6.

All told, Cohasset led after the fifth inning 66 percent at the time.

Carr wasn't as much frustrated with the late-game collapses as the way his team handled the early-season contests. It wasn't until halfway through the season that Cohasset began to loosen up and believe it had a chance at winning every time the players took the field.

"There were probably 10 games we could win next season," he said. "We were in the games and that's a major accomplishment for a new team. It took us a while to realize we could play at this level. We stopped beating ourselves and went after the other team."

Carr is already looking forward to the talent coming back next summer and, though he isn't making any predictions, believes the squad's record will be greatly improved.

"The future is bright and you gotta wear shades," Carr said optimistically. "We'll be much more competitive."

Carr is looking to upgrade the pitching to eight or nine arms on the mound. Matt Lewis, won two of Cohasset's three games, will be back, along with a staff which includes Eric Zukauskas, Rob Moody, Richard Dane, Rich Harrington and Ben Ketchum.

Ketchum came on strong as the season wore on and became a consistent middle reliever for Cohasset. Harrington was also solid and Carr is looking to him as a possible starter next year.

Kevin McKenna proved to be the best all-around player on the squad and it didn't go unnoticed by Carr. As one of the oldest players on the team, with Grant Emde and Jonah Berger, the younger members of the roster looked to him for guidance.

"Game in and game out he was a force," Carr said.

Steve Martin, left fielder Matt Lane and Dane all brought their talents from Scituate and made big contributions to the team. Hard-hitting third-baseman Rob Buckley put up good numbers on what was by far the youngest team in the league.

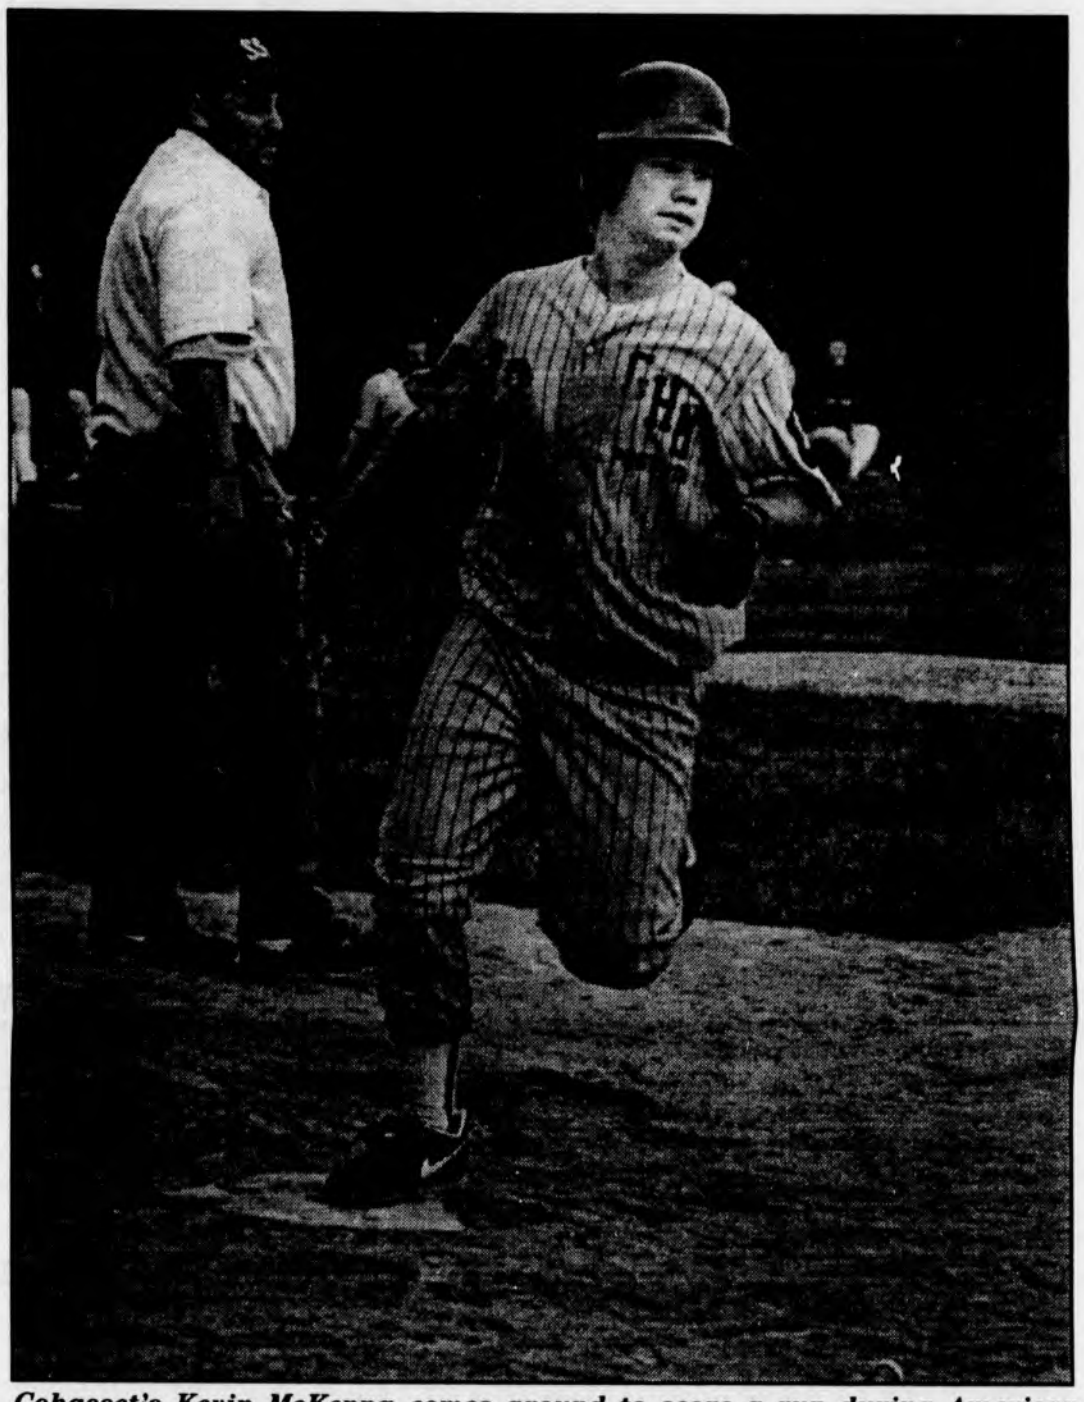
Cohasset provided plenty of offensive punch and out-hit its opposition in several games. "It was a good season for us and I'm looking forward to next year," Carr said.

Ben Smoot and Al Schwerin both swung the bat well, while Eric Arnold of Scituate slammed a pair of doubles in Cohasset's 3-0 loss to Braintree in the final game of the season.

Brian Wagner provided excellent defense in the outfield and should be a key player in Carr's plans for next summer.

"There's some hope on the horizon," he said. "You can virtually guarantee every team had one to four All-Scholastics on us."

The competition was tough, but Cohasset's biggest lesson was that its players realized they can play with the South Shore powers toe-to-toe. And with the added experience this season gave Cohasset, everyone may have to wear shades.



Cohasset's Kevin McKenna comes around to score a run during American Legion action.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

MOVE IN BEFORE SETTLEMENT?

QUESTION: A prospect wants to buy my home, but will not have the money for a couple of months. Should I let him move in before we finalize the sale?

ANSWER: One of the best ways to kill a sale is to allow a prospective buyer to move in before settlement. He may keep finding things wrong with the house, keep insisting they be fixed, or even worse, demand that an adjustment be made in price.

Sometimes the result is even more disastrous. The seller becomes disgusted with all the alleged complaints and calls the whole sale off. It is better to let a house sit empty than to let a prospective buyer move in before closing the sale.

A Mystic-al experience in Connecticut

Attractions and history combine for wonderful vacation destination

By Karen Nerney

New England's seacoast is an enticing place to spend a summer day or weekend.Nowhere is this more evident than in Mystic, Conn., where history and nature combine to create a pleasant vacation experience. Behind its stone walls and along its country roads, Mystic boasts a plethora of activities for the whole family. From Mystic Seaport and downtown Mystic to the Marinelife Aquarium and comfortable hotels or historic bed and breakfasts, Mystic appeals to a variety of tastes.

In the late 1800s, Mystic published a four-page weekly newspaper. Typesetters had to set a page in 10 hours maximum just to get a job. Since they were paid by how many pages they set, they learned to work very quickly.

That's just one of the lessons visitors can learn at MysticSeaport, an internationally recognized maritime museum and home to more than 400 vessels, including tall ships. The seaport brings to life a 19th century coastal community, complete with crafts, trades, and exhibits highlighting the period. Visitors can learn how sailors lived, sing a sea chantey (work song), or visit the captain's quarters of a 19th century whaling ship. And, kids can experience 19th century life in the children's museum, designed for would-be-sailors ages 7 and under.

"It's so many different things to everyone," said Tricia Wood, Mystic Seaport publicist. "A lot of people think it's boats and ships, and that's romantic and alluring. Then they get here and it's so much more. We have a variety of exhibits, including a rope walk from Plymouth, Mass., a working shipyard, an exhibit gallery with scrimshaw, marine heads, and more."

In addition to its regular exhibits and daily activities, the museum features "A Taste of History" beginning Aug. 1. The four-day festival features food and cooking from 19th century America. Visitors can watch ice cream-, butter-, and cheese-making demonstrations, as well as see a "fish split," the process of salting and preserving fish at sea.

Special programs include a marathon reading on July 31 of "Moby Dick" in celebration of author Herman Melville's 177th birthday, as well as the annual Mystic Seaport Antique & Classic Boat Rendezvous July 27 and 28. The rendezvous features costumed crews on approximately 50 boats whose design is based on or evolved from traditional fishing boats. The seaport also hosts its annual Chowderfest on Columbus Day weekend, Oct. 13 and 14.

Mystic Seaport is open year-round, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. in July and August; 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the off-season. Admission is $16 for adults, $8 for children 6-15; children 5 and under and members are admitted free. Some exhibits aren't terribly convenient for stroller-pushers, so you might want to bring along a backpack for those wee ones. For more information, call (203) 572-5315.

Mystic Marinelife Aquarium explores the secrets of underwater life. Forty indoor exhibits feature more than 3,500 specimens from around the world, including sharks, octopus, and Australian lion fish. Visitors can learn about how the Bluehead Wrasse changes its color and sex, as well as see a variety of marine animals in naturalistic habitats. There's a wonderful outdoor exhibit featuring Seal Island, home to harbor seals, gray seals, northern fur seals, and Steller's sea lions, as well as the Penguin Pavilion.

The Marine Theater offers daily entertainment, including a demonstration by Atlantic bottlenose dolphins and beluga whales.

The aquarium is open year-round (except Christmas Day, New Year's Day, and Thanksgiving) from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Summer hours (July 1 - Labor Day) are 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. Admission is $9.50 for adults; $8.50, senior citizens; $6.50, children 3-12. For more information, call (203) 572-5955.

Olde Mistick Village is a shopper's delight, with a wide array of gift and other shops. The area replicates an early 18th century New England Village. You'll find everything from pottery and crafts to T-shirts and stuffed animals. Wander along the village's picturesque paths, or stop at one of the restaurants.

During the summer months, the gazebo is the site of free summer concerts, and children can enjoy feeding feathered friends at the duck ponds. The Village is located adjacent to the aquarium, at the junction of routes 27 and 95. For more information and a calendar of events, call (860) 536-4941.

The folks at Mystic Hilton probably wish they had paid a little more attention to the attractive brunette staying at the hotel during the filming of "Mystic Pizza," the movie that gave Julia Roberts' film career a major boost. While Roberts has long since departed this little seaside community, the Hilton continues to offer luxury service to both families and business clientele.

"It's an interesting time for Mystic," said Peggie Cosgrove, public relations coordinator for the Hilton. "People who were here five or 10 years ago are going to see new things. It's worthwhile for families to come back again."

While the Hilton sees a good deal of business travel during the off-season, summer and school vacations are a big draw for families. As a result, the Hilton has a number of programs that cater to families with young children.

The hotel offers a "Vacation Station," which has a large selection of books and games young visitors can borrow. There's also a Teddy Turndown for Tots and free children's buffet, as well as a new outdoor playscape. The Mystic Minnow Club offers evening activities for kids, with art projects, stories, movies, and more at a slight charge.

Mystic is about a two-hour drive from Boston. For more information, call the Mystic Chamber of Commerce at (860) 572-9578; or Mystic & More at (800) 863-6569. Or, visit the Mystic Information Network at http://www.visitmystic.com.

Great golf vacation packages abound in New England

By
MaryAnn Flammia

Golf has become a favorite leisure activity for many. Whether it be in the morning, afternoon, or as the sun sets, many golf courses are full of anxious golfers. Many golf lovers vacation at resorts where they can play every day. And there is no shortage of golf resorts in New England and surrounding areas to provide a variety of amenities to fit one's lifestyle.

The end of the summer and fall season is a good time to take a golf vacation, as prices tend to decrease in the off-season. The weather is still pleasant, humidity is down, and temperatures are comfortable. Also, traveling mid-week usually results in lower prices compared to weekend travel.

The variety of resorts ranges from the prestigious to family-oriented.

If you want to be pampered at a facility that offers much more than golf, try one of the following resorts in the $170- to $290-per-night price range.

The Samoset Resort, located on the ocean in Rockport, Maine, was ranked America's seventh-most-beautiful golf course by "Golf Digest" in May 1995. It was also rated one of the leading destination resorts in the Northeast, according to Michael Lynch, Samoset marketing director.

The 18-hole course has six holes bordering the ocean, and magnificent views throughout the course.

Guests have the opportunity to take part in exciting packages such as golf clinics, and golf and putting tournaments. The resort offers 150 spacious guest rooms and suites, and most come with an ocean view and a private balcony or patio.

The resort also has a complete health and fitness center, as well as indoor and outdoor swimming pools, saunas, hot tubs, and other activities and programs available for guests. There are two dining areas. If you are looking for elegant dining, Marcel's is the place to go. For a more relaxed atmosphere, The Breakwater Lounge and Patio offers lighter dining, cocktails, and entertainment.

"At the Samoset, you can do absolutely nothing and have a great time. But if you're the active type, you can take advantage of what the surrounding area has to offer," said Lynch.

If you enjoy outdoor activities or just want to explore outside the resort, the Rockport area is the perfect place to be. There are many museums and shopping areas around town.

Another great getaway choice is Stowe Country Club, located in Stowe, Vt. Stowe is Vermont's top-rated mountain resort, with an 18-hole, par 72, 6,213-yard championship golf course. The course is set below Mt. Mansfield, Vermont's highest peak.

If you want to practice your game before hitting the course, you can do so at the 40-acre practice facility. It includes three driving ranges and four putting greens. There are also two- and three-day golf school programs that include everything you'll need, and more. Prices range from $250 for the two-day session to $350 for the three-day session.

Suite accommodations include breakfast and dinner during the fall season. There are also one- to three-bedroom condos. A meal plan starting at $85.40 can be purchased in addition to the room rate, and there is a fully equipped fitness center, sauna, whirlpool, and game room.

Stowe also offers an all-inclusive golf getaway package. This includes an inn room, green fees, and golf cart, as well as breakfast and dinner at the resort's restaurants, for $119 per person per day.

In Dixville Notch, N.H., is the Balsams Grand Resort and Hotel, a 15,000-acre private estate. The 18-hole championship golf course was designed by America's foremost golf architect, Donald J. Ross, in 1912. Built high on the west side of Keyser Mountain, golfers can enjoy the view of the Connecticut River Valley, Mt. Monadnock in Vermont, and the Canadian Hills.

Visitors can choose from select, superior, deluxe rooms, or the tower suite. The Balsams offers a rate that includes everything from three meals a day, to golf, to entertainment, to recreation fees, making it a true all-inclusive vacation.

The dining menu includes a variety of American and continental cuisine.

The resort and surrounding area has trails for walking, hiking, and mountain biking. There are also many areas of interest close by.

Going away on a golf vacation does not necessarily mean spending a lot of money.

The Bethel Inn & Country Club in Bethel, Maine, has packages that include two- to five-night weekend packages. You can choose to stay in the Traditional Inn's standard, superior, or deluxe room, where prices range from $89 to $180 per person, per night. Or, stay at the Fairway Townhouses in a one- or two-bedroom townhouse for $80-$130 per person, per night. Prices for midweek packages are even less.

These packages include unlimited use of all resort facilities, including golf. Other activities, such as the health club with pool, saunas, workout room, and game room, are on-site. There is also swimming, sailing, and canoeing.

Bethel Inn & Country Club's 6,663-yard, Geoffrey Cornish-designed golf course was rated among the top 10 resort courses in the Northeast by "America's Greatest Golf Resorts Magazine." It is the home of the PGA Fall Festival Pro-Am.

Bethel's golf school offers personalized and focused instruction, as well as proven teaching techniques, available in three- and five-day programs.

Get in the swing of things with a golf vacation.

The Sagamore, located in Bolton Landing, N.Y., is an island resort surrounded by the Adirondack Mountains and Lake George. The facility includes an 18-hole, par 70 course designed by Donald Ross in 1928. The course is on a 6,950-yard, beautifully landscaped piece of land. Golfers at all skill levels will enjoy the game.

Stay in the main hotel with prices starting at $99, or in the lodge where the prices are a bit lower, starting at $89.

"The Sagamore's setting is spectacular. We are a historical resort with modern conveniences. They're just not making places like this anymore," said Sagamore director of marketing, Hal Powell. "The fall season is a great time of the year to vacation here. The foliage is stunning, and we offer some terrific deals."

Enjoy the white-sand beach, pool, boating, waterskiing, or fishing in Lake George. The Sagamore Spa offers a health club, spa treatments and packages, and a diversity of dining selections, including a dinner cruise.

These are just a few suggestions from which to choose. Golf resorts tend to vary in what they offer. If you know what you are looking for, you are guaranteed to find the perfect place to spend your golf vacation.

New cable show promises wide-open format

By JENNIFER R. HORAN
Cohasset Mariner

Flip on your TV any Wednesday at 8 p.m., tune to cable channel 53, and you just might see Ilana Marks asking five lesbians who marched topless in Boston's recent Gay Pride Parade why they did it.

Or, you may find one of President Clinton's drug policy advisers talking about whether drug and alcohol laws are strict enough in America.

And there's always a chance that a political debate may be heating up the airwaves.

Televised Wednesdays on Continental Cablevision's community access channel, Marks' new live call-in show, "On the Mark," will feature question-and-answer sessions between guests from the political and social realms and television audience members from six South Shore communities who can write, E-mail or call in questions. The show will air in Scituate, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Hull and Norwell.

Unlike interview shows such as "Pierson to Person," Marks's will have more than one guest at a time from both sides of an issue to create a well-rounded dialogue, she said.

"I think it will be a good opportunity for people to find out what's going on," said Marks, a leader of the anti-rail Coastal Coalition and a selectman candidate this spring. "We will encourage discussion as opposed to keeping it tame. We encourage people to ask the tough questions. We want viewers to get the opportunity to see who the people are and what they're all about.

"I will always have the opponents on the show because, to me, that's what makes it compelling," she said. "I realize how nervous people get around here about controversy. They can't stand if someone has a different opinion. They get so uncomfortable. To me, the most exciting thing is to hear an opposing opinion. There is so much to learn, so much to discover. You leave the conversation feeling like you've learned something."

As the host of the show, Marks intends to remain neutral during discussions and debates, even during discussions of the Greenbush restoration, she said. At the end of each show, Marks plans to take a few minutes of air time for editorial comments and letters from the public.

"I want to show people the other side of town government, the real scoop," she said. "If somebody has something they really want to say I would let them come on."

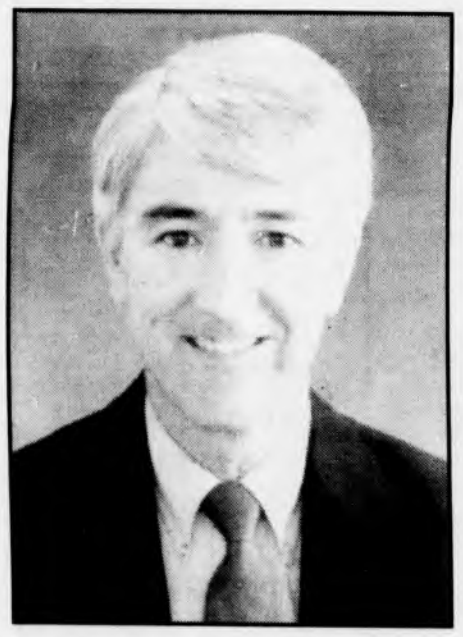
Ed Teague's Eye on Congress

HYANNIS, MA - With all the attention given to Congress these past two years, it is important to remember the biggest job for a Congressman is to get results for those he represents. Congressional candidate Ed Teague's Ten Point Plan for Cape Cod and the South Shore puts into proper perspective the key role for our new representative in Washington. In fact, Ed Teague has set a whole new standard.



Congressional Candidate Ed Teague

Teague's specific plan for fighting crime, reducing wasteful spending, curbing tax increases, protecting the elderly, and reforming welfare makes him the only candidate in Massachusetts' 10th District to offer real solutions and ideas. In an age when most politicians offer voters a "song and dance," Teague's approach is refreshing. And much needed.

At the heart of Teague's Ten Point Plan is his proven ability to fight for our area. Keep in mind that Ed Teague, as a State Representative, is respected by Democrats and Republicans alike on Beacon Hill for his fighting spirit. "People are tired of politicians who don't produce," says Ed Teague. "I've produced."

Indeed he has. Ed Teague, for example, established the Environmental License Plate, which raised two million dollars to help our state's environment. He also wrotethe law cracking down on deadbeat parents and those convicted of domestic violence. "It's all about results," reflected Ed Teague in a recent interview. "My plan to create jobs, fight crime and reform welfare--not empty campaign promises. My record shows that when I set out to get something done, it usually gets done."

Of course, Teague's results are even more remarkable considering he has operated as member of the minority party in Boston. In Washington, however, he will be in the majority party. "It doesn't matter to me," Teague says flatly. "As long as its good for Cape Cod and the South Shore, I'm for it. Otherwise I'll fight them every step of the way."

You can order a free copy of Ed Teague's Ten Point Plan by calling Teague for Congress at 508-790-1200.

Cohasset police seek charges against host

Party linked to teen's death

By MARY FORD and KIMBERLEY KEYES
Cohasset Mariner

Police will seek criminal complaints in Quincy District Court against a Cohasset resident who hosted a graduation party where minors allegedly were served alcohol.

Police began investigating the June 22 party after an alcohol-related crash claimed the life of one of the guests, 18-year-old Gregory Smith of Marshfield.

Marshfield police said Smith was estimated to be driving 56 miles per hour before he crashed his car into a telephone pole on Summer Street in Marshfield early on the morning of June 23.

Investigators alerted Cohasset police hours later that they believed Smith had attended a party in town, Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

"But we were stymied until several witnesses came forward last week," he said. "The information the minors gave led us to seek these complaints."

Police are seeking charges of procuring alcohol for minors and contributing to the delinquency of a minor against John Lennon, 47, of Surry Dr., Cohasset.

Lennon hosted the party to celebrate his son's graduation from Thayer Academy and his daughter's college graduation.

Smith also graduated this spring from Thayer, where he was voted "Most Spirited" in his class. He served as a tour guide for four years and participated in the school's speech, hockey and lacrosse programs. He also played varsity soccer, for which he won a Coach's Award. He had received a scholarship to attend Norwich University in

Baby-sitting offered during town meeting

But town will not pay for it

By MARY FORD

The town will not subsidize a baby-sitting service for parents who would like to attend town meeting, selectmen said this week.

They stressed they have no problem with the school department allowing Deer Hill School to be used as a baby-sitting site but would not agree to appropriate the $200 requested to offset the cost of hiring baby-sitters.

The Aug. 12 special town meeting, which includes an article to rescind last spring's positive annual town meeting vote on the school project, is expected to draw

Straits Pond complaints surface

By CHARLENE VANDINI

A Windy Hill Road resident has complained to Cohasset officials about what she sees as neglect of the Straits Pond area.

Virginia Ferenz has written to the selectmen twice in the last month about litter and overgrown trees and bushes that obstruct the path to the pond, and other untrimmed plants that impede visibility on this winding section of Jerusalem Road.

She charged that town officials ignore this section of Cohasset while increasing real estate valuations because the homes there have water views of the pond.

In her July 8 letter to selectmen, Ferenz wrote that she must listen for oncoming cars when trying to turn onto Jerusalem Road because she cannot see far enough up the street.

On a walk to West Corner, she wrote that she observed "rags, buckets, cups, beer cans, donut boxes, soda cans and bottles, liquor bottles, and assorted paper debris."

Ferenz also said that when the public

Pre-town meeting conferences are slated

Selectmen will hold a meeting with town counsel, the town moderator, and the town administrator at 8:30 a.m. Monday (Aug. 5) at town hall to go over any amended special town meeting articles. Then at 10 a.m., selectmen will conduct a site visit to the Music Circus to go over the logistics of the Aug. 12 special town meeting.

Train forum postponed

The Citizens Advisory Committee on the train did not hold its scheduled second public forum July 30 as planned because the meeting was not posted with the town clerk's office. Chairman James A. Mullen said the meeting will be rescheduled.

Comments and concerns on traffic and parking issues, air and noise pollution, wetlands and herbicides, and safety and financial issues relating to the train may be sent to the Citizen's Advisory Committee for the Old Colony/Greenbush Railroad Line c/o Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset 02025. Citizens may also contact committee members: James A. Mullen, chairman; Peter Pearce, John Rafferty, Edward F. Woods, Barbara Canney, Nancy J. Butler, and Mary A. Foley.

Ambulance billing update

In June, the town collected $7,488.29 in ambulance bills out of a possible $13,985.56. In fiscal year 1996, which ended June 30, the town collected $100,226.49 out of a possible $121,513.45 for a collection rate of 68 percent.

Information on vandalism is sought

Anyone with information on any damage to the high school track and field property or the equipment thereon is asked to call the Cohasset police at 383-1055.

Last Friday, the front and rear windows and lights of a backhoe/loader were smashed. Damage is estimated at $2,500, according to Wayne Sawchuk, who donated used of the vehicle and is serving as clerk of the works on the high school field project.

Sawchuk was restoring a wetlands buffer zone and preparing an area for the relocated ropes course next to the new track.

The machine was used Friday afternoon and was damaged that night, Sawchuk said. A street sign, taken from nearby Briarwood Lane, was used to do the damage, along with several large rocks. Unfortunately, the machine has no coverage for glass damage, he said.

Sawchuk said the project has been plagued by numerous incidents of vandalism to the general contractor's equipment and to the property. Several cars have been driven over newly seeded areas around the track. A line of buses was used recently to keep vehicles off the new pavement areas and this was successful, he said. Permanent gates have now been installed.

Cohasset police seek charges against host

Vermont and planned to pursue a military career.

Allan Tufankjian, a Brockton attorney representing Donald and Donna Smith of Marshfield, said his clients are devastated by the loss of their son.

He said they were particularly hurt by newspaper accounts of the tragedy which labeled their son a drunk driver. Chief Noonan said Smith's blood-alcohol level revealed he had been drinking, though he would not specify the blood-alcohol count.

"He had such a great life," Tufankjian said of Gregory Smith. "He shouldn't just be remembered as someone who died as a drunk driver."

Lennon's attorney, Bernard Hamill of Quincy, declined to comment on the case.

Noonan said there was a bartender at the party to serve adults. Police believe there was also a keg of beer in another area from which teens were drinking openly.

Tufankjian said the Smiths had "no idea" there would be drinking at the party.

He cited three reasons why he opposes allowing minors to drink in a home, a practice which some adults believe gives parents greater control over teen drinking.

First, "you can't control it," second, "you'll never control it," and third, it "validates something that's against the law," Tufankjian said.

Noonan said this was the first time he could recall an adult host being charged with serving alcohol to minors in Cohasset.

But that doesn't mean police look the other way, he said.

"Before, now and after (this case), if we have one shred (of information) that any adults in town are procuring alcohol for minors we will pursue prosecution on it," he said.

In recent months, police in Duxbury and Plymouth have charged adults with providing alcohol to minors at parties. Both cases are still pending.

The hearing on the potential charges against Lennon is at 8 a.m. The clerk magistrate will decide whether there is enough evidence to issue a criminal complaint, Noonan explained. If a complaint is issued, Lennon will be arraigned on the charges before a judge.

Complaints voiced about Straits Pond pathway works department has trimmed bushes in the past, the brush has remained piled along the side of the road, creating additional impediments for motorists and pedestrians alike.

Repeated calls to the DPW this year finally resulted in assurances that Straits Pond was on the list of projects, she said. She was told that the work there would be done when the workers finished working on the baseball fields.

"As far as I'm concerned, no one is going to get hit by a car crossing the baseball field," she wrote in her June 20 letter to selectmen.

Ferenz said the "eyesore" across the street from her house "is affecting the sale of our property."

"If the highway department can mow the town common and the triangle at the base of Forest Avenue near Black Rock Beach, why can't they mow this area on a regular basis?"

She added, "We do live in Cohasset out here, you know."

She noted that during World War II, the part of the area around the pond was all grass, and was used as a Victory Garden. While the town is spending thousands of dollars on an open space study, Straits Pond would be used by the nearby residents and is being overlooked.

Ferenz said that the conservation commission has so strictly adhered to state law that "nothing is done there."

Conservation agent Paul Shea said the commission gave permission last year to the public works department for periodic brush trimming, and maintaining a six-foot wide path to the pond.

He also noted that only a limited amount of trimming is possible along the road because the shoulder drops off down an embankment.

Conservation commissioner Veneta Roebuck said Ferenz has made these same complaints on numerous occasions, and remains dissatisfied with the answers she has been given.

A path to the pond is all that can be allowed, Roebuck said. "We can't allow unlimited cutting."

However, Ferenz has legitimate complaints about the trash and the curving section of Jerusalem Road is "horrendous," Roebuck allowed. But the conservation commission has no money in its budget for the maintenance of any conservation areas and the public works department has a limited amount of manpower.

Trimming trees to improve residents' view of the pond isn't allowed, conservation commissioner Susan Cope added.

But, the open space plan may help solve some of these problems, she said. An inventory of 55 sites has been completed; maps are being drawn, and the survey the commission distributed has been returned by more than 200 residents.

Town meeting approved $12,000 earlier this year for three consultants to prepare the plan. Although the plan is an outgrowth of the project to acquire Turkey Hill, once completed it will allow Cohasset to apply for state grants, which could include money for maintenance of other conservation areas.

Last spring, town meetings in Cohasset and Hingham voted to join three private conservation groups to buy the Turkey Hill property which straddles the two towns, for $835,000. Cohasset agreed to pay $109,600 for the 20 acres on its side; Hingham will pay $164,500 for 30 acres in that town. The Hingham Land Conservation Trust, the Cohasset Conservation Trust, and the Trustees of Reservations will contribute the balance. The two towns are eligible to receive up to $450,000 reimbursement from the state. The Trustees of Reservations will maintain and manage the property when the sale is completed.

Cope said applications for the state grants require the town to have an open space plan.

With that open space plan, the commission will have a documented plan for improving accessibility to and maintaining these public lands—including the Straits Pond area.

In the meantime, the conservation commission is encouraging neighborhood involvement, such as community clean-ups. The Windy Hill residents did a clean up of the area earlier this spring.

Roebuck agreed that the clean up was very successful, and "truckloads of trash" was removed from the area.

Public Works Supt. Harold Litchfield said, the DPW and tree departments have four workers each, who must care for all town property. He has sent crews to the Straits Pond area, and done the work that the conservation commission has allowed.

"We have to work in other places, too," Litchfield said.

Thumbs are way up for new elementary school, board says

School proponents got some good news from town hall this week.

Not only do selectmen wholeheartedly endorse the proposed new school by urging rejection of the town meeting citizens' petition article asking to stop the $9.9 million project — but they said a new state law will help smooth out the financing.

"The position of the board is that we move forward on this project by unanimously, strongly rejecting Article 1," Selectman Nan Roth said Monday.

Five hundred citizens signed a petition to call a special town meeting, set for Aug. 12, to rescind the positive annual town meeting vote on the school. This citizens' petition is Article 1. There are six articles on the warrant including two other citizens' petitions.

Article 6, another citizens' petition article submitted by abutters and neighbors to the proposed school, asks that the site of the new school be moved nearer the Deer Hill School. Selectmen also unanimously urged rejection of this article at their meeting Monday.

They also said recent state legislation will allow the town to go out for short-term borrowing on the school project for five years as opposed to the two allowed now. State reimbursement (expected to cover 60 percent of the project) will kick in after five years.

The new allowable short-term bonding will take the spike out of the "bubble years" when residents' taxes would increase sharply to cover the lag time between receiving state funding and the previously allowed limit on short-term borrowing, town accountant Michael Buckley explained.

In a telephone interview Buckley also said through short-term borrowing, which has lower rates, the town can borrow as it needs money for the project and won't have to borrow the full $10 million right away.

Baby-sitting offered during town meeting

throngs of parents.

Town Moderator George Marlette said he will not permit children at town meeting which will be held at the Music Circus. At the annual town meeting last March, many citizens complained that children ran up and down the aisles and were generally disruptive.

PSO president Kathy Ofsthun told selectmen this week that the PSO will have 12 teenagers and two-to-three adults supervising the children left at Deer Hill during the Aug. 12 town meeting. She asked if the town could contribute $200 toward paying the baby-sitters.

"The town should not supply babysitting," said Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown. "It is our responsibility to hold town meeting and it's the responsibility of the PSO to hold babysitting."

Selectman Nan Roth agreed but said she had no problem with the PSO using the school to provide the service. Roth also pointed out that baby-sitting is being offered to all parents regardless of their stance on the school issue.

Former selectman Diane Sullivan, who was present at Monday's meeting to discuss the North Cohasset sewer project, warned that the town would set a precedent if it agreed to the subsidy and would have to provide baby-sitting at all future town meetings. She also cautioned that the action could be seen as partiality because in her view, the subsidized service will benefit proponents of the school.

Peter Pratt argued for the subsidy because he felt no one should be denied the right to attend town meeting because of baby-sitting problems.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested the PSO ask for donations from parents who utilize the service to help offset the cost.

Ancient Farmers' Market offers cornucopia

By JENNIFER R. HORAN
Cohasset Mariner

Entrepreneur Michelle Goodson had gotten so sick of supermarkets she would only go grocery shopping once a month.

"I was tired of going into those gargantuan stores. It was very sterile," she recalled. "I stopped going grocery shopping. There was really something missing."

Within the next two weeks, Goodson hopes to fill that void — as well as all of the hand-built shelves — at the Ancient Farmers' Market on Gannett Road.

"I have a vision and we're slowly but surely getting there," said Goodson, who has been renovating the store for the past three-and-a-half months.

Goodson's vision includes fresh produce from more than 80 New England farms; old-fashioned, homemade breads delivered daily; a salad bar with homemade dressings; microbrewed beer; gourmet wine and coffee; as well as all-natural olive oil and tortilla chips, which are now available at the just-opened market.

Soon, an organic produce section, a baked goods section and a deli counter — featuring prepared foods, deli meats, seafood and salami hanging from the ceiling— will round out the shop's selection of fine foods that cannot be found anywhere else in town, Goodson said.

"We're focusing on each individual area right now, to get it down," she said. "Then we'll have a grand opening. It takes a lot of work."

A Cohasset resident, Goodson rises at 5 a.m. every day to begin preparations for the market's daily operation, including making trips to Iggy's Bread of the World in Watertown and local farms for the day's freshest offerings. Food will be removed from the shelf after one day.

"Everything is fresh," she said. "It's a small, applied science."

Every season will bring its own fresh batch of fruits and vegetables. She described the upcoming season's harvest as over-bountiful, with apples from local orchards, pumpkins from local patches and the market's homemade soups. Goodson plans to set up a few small tables outside for customers to sit and sip espresso and capuccino as they watch the leaves fall this autumn.

> 'I have a real love for the old way of doing things. Today's world is a little bit over-processed. The purpose of the market is to get that community sense back.'
> — Michelle Goodson.

"There's so much to look forward to season by season," she said.

The market also features customized gift baskets for all occasions.

Goodson hopes her old-fashioned attitude toward grocery shopping will attract customers who have tired of depersonalized supermarkets.

"I have a real love for the old way of doing things," she explained. "Today's world is a little bit over-processed. The purpose of the market is to get that community sense back."

Part of Goodson's plan to ensure a pleasant shopping experience involves special attention to customer service, which she found particularly lacking in the corporate chains.

Mosquito Committee gives advice

The Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee encourages residents to take measures to reduce the number of mosquitoes breeding in their yard and neighborhoods, rather than rely on pesticide spraying to kill the adult mosquito. While pesticide spraying kills mosquitoes present in an area at the time of spraying, the relief lasts just a few days, at which time new mosquitoes will hatch from undisturbed breeding sites. Residents can get better long-term relief from mosquitoes by eliminating them at their source.

Mosquitos breed in still water, and it only takes a few days of water stagnation for adult mosquitoes to hatch from previously deposited eggs. The Mosquito Control Committee urges residents to eliminate areas of standing water on their property, such as wheelbarrows, wading pools, old tires, pails, unused flower pots and clogged gutters. Short periods of summer rainfall can cause water to collect in any of these areas, creating a likely spot for mosquitoes to breed. If you remove the water, they cannot breed, and that means fewer mosquitoes hatch in yards and neighborhoods.

If there are large areas of standing water on an individual's property, or even a depression in the ground which repeatedly retains small quantities of water for three days to a week, try to drain the areas. If this is not possible, treat with Mosquito Dunks, available from local hardware stores and garden centers. One dunk will treat 100 square feet of water for a period of 30 days. These dunks will kill mosquito larvae without impacting people, wildlife or the surrounding environment. Preventing still water from collecting and killing mosquito larvae are the safest, most effective methods of controlling the adult mosquito population in neighborhoods.

While mosquitoes are mostly a nuisance to the South Shore area, in rare situations, certain species may transmit Eastern Encephalitis, a rare but serious disease caused by a virus. To monitor EE, the state Department of Public Health sets mosquito traps all over Eastern Massachusetts from May until the first frost. Mosquitoes are collected and brought to the state laboratory for counting and testing. DPH uses the data collected to develop preventive strategies and warn local boards of health of any threat of EE in their areas.

To protect oneself from biting mosquitoes, avoid outdoor activity during peak hours of mosquito feeding, in the early morning and early evening. If you are outdoors during these hours, wear long-sleeved shirts and long pants and use insect repellents that include N-N-diethylmeta-toluamide (DEET). These repellents are available in varying concentrations, from 7.5 percent to 100 percent DEET. The state Department of Public Health recommends a low concentration of DEET, 10 percent or less for use on children, and products with less than 30 percent DEET for adults. DEET should never be used on infants. Proper use of repellent will repel mosquitoes for several hours. However, illness can occur with overuse of these products, and caution should be exercised when using them.

Current information about mosquito control from Mass. Department of Public Health, Audubon Society and general medical media is available to residents in a hang-pocket located in the entry area of Town Hall.

For further assistance in controlling mosquitoes in backyards, call the Mosquito Control Committee at the Board of Health, 383-9000, Ext. 121. A message, containing caller's name and telephone number, may be left. A committee member will return calls personally.

Ancient Farmers' Market offers cornucopia

"We're getting to know everyone's names," she said. "We're asking them what they'd like to see in the market and we're trying to get it for them. We will take that extra step."

The employees will help carry customers' groceries to their cars and will answer any questions or concerns about the market.

"We'd rather be minus an apple purchase, than minus a customer," she said, referring to the market's refund policy. "Our success depends on Scituate, on people at least giving us a try. I'm sure some people are conditioned to (shopping at supermarkets). But we have what supermarkets don't have."

The meats, produce, breads and products offered at Goodson's market are "the best around," she said. "Supermarkets don't buy from local farmers. Everything is mass-produced. You will not find any of this at Stop & Shop."

Supermarkets also don't have the Ancient Farmers' Market's historic building, the original site of the North Scituate railroad station, complete with the original conductor's doors and ticket window. The storefront had remained vacant since the Country Package Store closed in 1994.

Initially, Goodson had set her heart on opening her market at the former North Cohasset Fire Station on Hull Street in Cohasset, but at the last minute found out the town wanted to keep the building for a future sewer pumping station.

"I think everything works out for a reason," she said. "I was in love with that building, but the town decided it was in its best interest to use it to rectify its (waste) water problems. Unfortunately, I didn't get that building, but this is such a beautiful building as well."

Behind the bread counter, Goodson has displayed a 48-state American flag, in honor of her father. On the side of the building, a colorful mural painted by Massachusetts College of Art student Tom Grealy depicts a farmer at work.

"It's the icing on the cake for the market," Goodson said. "It really says what we're all about."

The market will be open during the summer from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., Monday through Saturday and noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday. In the wintertime, the market may close earlier.

Farmer's market to start soon

The Chamber of Commerce is working with the Village Renaissance Committee in establishing a farmer's market in the village.

The farmer's market will be held from 4 to 8 p.m, Thursdays from Aug. 1 through the end of September in the town parking lot behind the village.

Six local vendors have signed up and will provide shoppers with a variety of goods including fruits, vegetables, herbs, flowers, plants, oils and vinegars, Chamber vice president Dean Rizzo said.

Additional vendors are welcome. Call Rizzo at 383-1994 for more information.

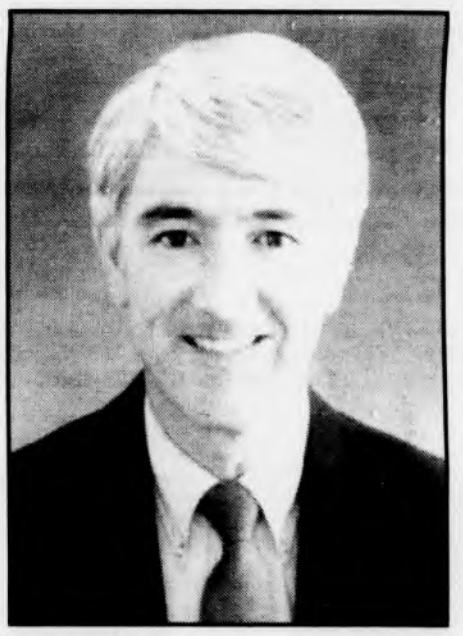
Ed Teague's
Eye on Congress

HYANNIS, MA - With all the attention given to Congress these past two years, it is important to remember the biggest job for a Congressman is to get results for those he represents. Congressional candidate Ed Teague's Ten Point Plan for Cape Cod and the South Shore puts into proper perspective the key role for our new representative in Washington. In fact, Ed Teague has set a whole new standard.



Congressional Candidate Ed Teague

Teague's specific plan for fighting crime, reducing wasteful spending, curbing tax increases, protecting the elderly, and reforming welfare makes him the only candidate in Massachusetts' 10th District to offer real solutions and ideas. In an age when most politicians offer voters a "song and dance," Teague's approach is refreshing. And much needed.

At the heart of Teague's Ten Point Plan is his proven ability to fight for our area. Keep in mind that Ed Teague, as a State Representative, is respected by Democrats and Republicans alike on Beacon Hill for his fighting spirit. "People are tired of politicians who don't produce," says Ed Teague. "I've produced."

Indeed he has. Ed Teague, for example, established the Environmental License Plate, which raised two million dollars to help our state's environment. He also wrotethe law cracking down on dead-beat parents and those convicted of domestic violence. "It's all about results," reflected Ed Teague in a recent interview. "My plan to create jobs, fight crime and reform welfare--not empty campaign promises. My record shows that when I set out to get something done, it usually gets done."

Of course, Teague's results are even more remarkable considering he has operated as member of the minority party in Boston. In Washington, however, he will be in the majority party. "It doesn't matter to me," Teague says flatly. "As long as its good for Cape Cod and the South Shore, I'm for it. Otherwise I'll fight them every step of the way."

You can order a free copy of Ed Teague's Ten Point Plan by calling Teague for Congress at 508-790-1200.

Visitors from Phoenix enjoy our Sandy Beach!

Here is some tennis news that all will want to hear. On June 16 in Baden-Baden, Germany, Chum Steele of Cohasset and Charlie Hoeveler of Ross, Calif., beat Hans Niels and Johan Stuch, both of Germany, with a score of 6-2, 6-1 to win the European 50-and-over doubles championship. For Steele, the victory was his first European title to add to one Canadian and 15 United States titles.

Now you know who to pick for your team when choosing partners in doubles tennis! Congrats go out to you, Chum!

Amy Crafts, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roger Crafts Jr. of Cohasset, received a BA from Williams College at the school's 207th commencement exercises June 2. The commencement address was delivered by George Bush, 41st President of the United States. It was a memorable event indeed!

Amy majored in history, and her activities included soccer and squash. Here's to every success for you as you enter the business world, Amy!

Everyone knows how lucky we are to have a beach like Sandy Beach. It is beautiful and loads of fun. July 14 was a great beach day, one that we all dream about. Jason and Justin Fisher of Phoenix, Ariz., were especially happy to be there. The boys were here for a visit with their cousins, Stefanie and Ashley Cook.

The Cook and Fisher cousins enjoy a great day at Sandy Beach!

Justin and Jason were so excited to be in our paper. Hopefully they will show everyone in Phoenix how great our beach is!

Speaking of kids having fun, we were at Osgood School Playground last week and spend a great deal of time picking up broken glass, cigarette butts and other items dangerous for our children. Perhaps we should all get together one day and have a clean-up so that it will look like it did when it was first opened. Or if we find out who does the littering, let's make them do a big clean-up! Whatever, let's all concentrate on keeping the playground clean! and safe!

Hats off to the American Legion, who sponsored two great boys to go to Boy's State, which was held at Stonehill College in June. Patrick Hurley and John Kasameyer were the two luck boys who attended the week-long program.

Both worked hard, attending lectures, civics classes and town meetings and learning about budget, political and management issues — all that sort of thing. They were really enthusiastic about their week there and certainly learned a lot about town government! Maybe someday one of them will be moderator or on our town council. Who knows?!

Lots of people are excited today, Aug. 1, because it is the first day of the Village Farmers' Market! If you cannot make it this evening, just remember they will be held every Thursday from 4 to 8 p.m. in the town parking lot.

There will be vegetables, herbs, flowers and breads — lots of items from lots of vendors, and there will even be some entertainment. Tommy McCarthy on the fiddle, and Louise Costello on the banjo and accordion, will perform. All that — and wonderful fresh veggies, too. Yummy!

We extend hearty congratulations to Judy Fitzsimmons, who was named secretary of the Massachusetts Municipal Public Health Nurses Association at their annual meeting. As most of you know, Judy is on the Board of Health in Cohasset, plus being a busy mom — same old story, ask a busy person!

I have been asked to remind teens that their center will be closed on weekends for the rest of the summer. Stay tuned for information on summer events that may be held.

Ozzie Ingram makes the news again this week, this time because he was cited by the South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society for his volunteer service. He must hold the record in Cohasset for the number of years served. He is a true gem of a gent!

Lest we forget, Priscilla and Ed Long were also cited for their volunteer driving. Hats off to you all!

That's the news for this week. Hopefully there is some event in your family you want to share with us. Please give me a call.

Obituaries

Patricia V. Purcell

Patricia V. Purcell, 82, died July 19 at Norwell Knoll after a long illness. She was a long-time resident of Cohasset.

"Pat," as she was known to her friends, was a woman of many virtues and talents. Perhaps her highest achievement came in coping with the challenges of blindness that overtook her some 30 years ago. She was so successful in meeting the challenge that her impairment was hardly noticed by others. She continued to live her life to the fullest, with a smile on her face. She was often seen walking down the hill from her house on Sohier Street to the Village to take a bus to Boston or wherever she needed to go.

Mrs. Purcell was an excellent cook, mixing batter for cookies, picking blueberries and strawberries at nearby farms and making jams and jellies, which she enjoyed giving to her many friends.

Her one thought was always doing for others. She knit carriage robes for new babies, visited the sick and comforted the dying. She never grew weary of doing good, and her mind was always alert and eager to learn new skills.

Mrs. Purcell made a special contribution to society in recent years by working as a family counselor, particularly in helping alcoholic individuals. Clients, young and old, men and women, came to her home for counseling, and she became their trusted friend. She also served on several mental health boards on the South Shore.

Mrs. Purcell was the wife of the late Joseph M. Purcell, a former Boston newspaperman, and leaves two sons, Peter R. Purcell of Quincy and Kevin M. Purcell of Laurel, Md.; and a step-daughter, Jayne Purcell of Boxboro.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Burial was in Mount Auburn Cemetery, Cambridge.

Donations in her memory may be made to the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind, Gift and Bequest Fund, 88 Kingston St., Boston 02111.

Funeral arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Mary Ida McArthur

Mary Ida (Shomphe) McArthur, 88, formerly of Cohasset, died July 24 in New Jersey.

She was a resident of Cohasset for 55 years before moving to Florida and later to New Jersey.

Mrs. McArthur was an avid bridge player and was given the title master bridge player when she won the silver cup in duplicate bridge in Daytona Beach, Fla.

Mrs. McArthur was the wife of Earl R. McArthur and leaves two sons, Earl R. McArthur Jr. and William H. McArthur, both of Cohasset; a daughter Rhoda M. Jones of New Jersey; two sisters, Margaret Chaisson of Marshfield and Bella Dupont of Quebec, Canada; eight grandchildren; three great-grandchildren; and several nieces and nephews. She was the mother of the late Robert E. McArthur.

A graveside service was held July 30 in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Farmers' Market

From 4 to 8 p.m. this evening Cohasset Village will host its first Farmers' Market which promises to be a real happening.

Not only will Cohasseters be able to purchase herbs, fresh and dried flowers and fresh fruits, vegetables and breads — but organizers have arranged for Irish instrumentalists Tommy McCarthy on fiddle and Louise Costello on banjo and accordion to perform.

The Farmers' Market has been made possible through the efforts of the village revitalization committee made up of the Chamber of Commerce, Village Renaissance Committee, business people and ordinary citizens.

Just a few months ago, Chamber vice president Dean Rizzo conducted the first "brainstorming" session at French Memories with concerned folk about what could be done to give the Village a badly needed shot in the arm.

At that meeting, lots of ideas were hashed out and Anna Abbruzzese, a member of the Village Renaissance Committee which works on village beautification efforts, suggested a Farmers' Market and then, she and Mr. Rizzo took the necessary steps to make it happen.

In subsequent meetings more action plans emerged including drafting a town-wide questionnaire to solicit residents' opinions about the Village and a lobbying effort to persuade the MBTA that a village rail station is critical to the downtown area.

We're excited about the progress that the village revitalization group has made.

The Farmers' Market comes just at the right time. It's summer and we can all socialize while we shop and enjoy the Village atmosphere.

A clear policy

Selectmen need to come up with a clear, definitive policy on citizens' access to town counsel on town meeting matters.

Apparently, the wording of all three citizen petition articles for the Aug. 12 special town meeting is flawed. Two articles ask for reconsideration of prior, positive town meeting votes authorizing the North Cohasset sewer project and new school; and the third asks for the site of the new school to be changed.

Not being lawyers, we can't tell you what's wrong with the language in these articles.

This week, fearing abuse of the service and questioning if town counsel's help would be a conflict of interest, selectmen said use of town counsel to assist citizens' groups in drafting acceptable warrant articles is taboo. But because North Cohasset residents are working with sewer commissioners and therefore "the town" to come up with an article — employment of town counsel in that case is okay.

Some of you may recall at the special town meeting on the train last fall, the citizens' petition article was deemed illegal. The proponents didn't find out in time. So, former town counsel Richard A. Henderson helped them with the wording of a resolution to substitute for the article. In light of the controversial nature of the article, Mr. Henderson made the right decision — and the special town meeting, which drew a crowd of more than 600, went forward.

The proponents of the two flawed "school" articles will have to seek the help of private attorneys to make them right. Selectmen said they will review the amended articles with town counsel Monday morning.

Of course, selectmen should rightly restrict the use of town counsel to "town" matters. But we don't see the harm in having town counsel assist with rewording of town meeting articles submitted by citizens. As with the train resolution, it can end up happening anyway on town meeting floor if proponents' don't get advice or the right advice.

Is it a conflict for town counsel, who represents the town and town boards, to assist proponents of an article that the "town" doesn't support? We're not sure. But, if it's just a simple case changing words or adding legal phrases, we can't see that it is. A municipal lawyer like our town counsel Paul DeRensis could probably suggest the appropriate phraseology in minutes.

This issue deserves further study and a clear-cut policy drafted so everyone is treated fairly.

Sewer compromise reached, Guild says

To the Editor:

This is in reply to Maria Plante's letter in the most recent issue of the Mariner. I believe that several of her statements would normally require clarification, but subsequent to her letter, the proponents of the sewer article in the Aug. 12 Special Town Meeting have agreed with the sewer commissioners on a compromise.

Under the circumstances, I feel that specific comments on Maria Plante's letter would be counter-productive.

In summary, we have mutually agreed to postponement of the sewer article with satisfactory assurance to the proponents of the article incorporated in the motion for postponement. I believe that, from this point on, all parties expect to proceed positively and constructively to the completion of the North Cohasset Sewer Project on an equitable basis.

Cohasset Coalition objects to mitigation measures

Leaders of the Cohasset office of the Coastal Coalition met July 21 and are sending a letter of protest to the town's Board of Selectmen regarding recent Greenbush mitigation discussions. They want to remind Cohasset selectmen that the train continues to be unpopular with residents of Scituate and Hingham as well as Cohasset. Last year's town meetings proved that at least 50 percent of Cohasset residents do not want the commuter rail.

Members of the Coalition made a brief presentation to the selectmen June 17. At that time, the selectmen were asked to write a letter to Gov. Weld protesting Greenbush restoration and to send a letter to the state Inspector General asking for an investigation into the project. Similar requests were made of the Hingham selectmen who acted immediately. So far, the Cohasset selectmen have refused to move on the request. Why?

The Cohasset Mitigation Committee are either experts on this issue nor should they be considered spokespersons for the entire town. Furthermore, the Coalition resents the media's use of the words "growing popularity" in respect to the proposed train station in the downtown area. A multilevel parking facility and an 800-foot platform are outrageous and its "growing popularity" is based on approximately 80 responses to a survey on the revitalization of downtown Cohasset. This option was never part of the original project. In a recent meeting with the MBTA project director, it was stated that the MBTA can move its proposed stations in terms of feet, not miles, leaving a train station in downtown Cohasset unlikely. He also made mention of the negative effects of pollution from idling trains to residents living in the downtown area.

Town selectmen are obligated to protect the town and its residents from severe impacts on the quality of life. Twelve grade crossings in town, chain link fence, 15-foot wooden walls, 110db horns, diesel pollution and freight of any kind are all severe and unacceptable.

The Coastal Coalition continues to fight the Greenbush project. The Secretary of Environmental Affairs has yet to approve the line. Members have led other concerned citizens to the first three Weld/Kerry debates. Both candidates are well aware that South Shore residents are unhappy with the governor's decision. Plans are to continue to make appearances at future debates including the next one to be held Aug. 19. It is hoped that the governor will finally concede to be fact that Greenbush is too costly, serves too few, and disrupts too many neighborhoods.

This press release from the Coastal; Coalition was provided for publication to the Cohasset Mariner.

School decision should be reversed

To the Editor:

Would you buy a home without thoroughly inspecting it and the property and neighborhood where it was built? Would you buy a car without driving it and making sure it was in good mechanical condition? In fact, is it wise to make any substantial purchase without knowing what you're getting for your money?

I'm afraid that's what was done by the residents of Cohasset who voted for a new school on the April ballot. Now that the facts have been revealed about the proposed building and site, you have a chance to redeem yourselves and reverse the $16 million (includes interest) decision at the special town meeting on Monday, Aug. 12.

The abhorrent, undemocratic town meetings held March 30 and April 1, that were overcast with rudeness and unorthodox behavior, should have been, in my opinion, declared null and void. Since then, I have been questioning over and over the goings on in our town.

Since when is it the decision of a few individuals to personally put up money to keep a school project going without the townspeople's knowledge, opinion or consent? One architectural firm was selected to assess the Osgood School and the possibility of renovations and expansion. Does it surprise you that a negative report was given?

June 19, along with would-be abutters and townspeople, I walked the proposed wetlands site. There are serious deficiencies with the site which now have been revealed to the townspeople.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

On this same evening, at a meeting of the Cohasset School Facilities Committee, attended by those who walked the site and the School Design Committee, the superintendent of schools had the impudence to state that he believed the residents of Cohasset should be able to afford this project! He had the audacity to speculate the financial status of Cohasset residents. He doesn't live in our town. He doesn't pay our taxes.

I toured the Osgood School and it is in disarray. This is an outrage to the taxpayers of Cohasset and should be an embarrassment to the school administration who historically has not allocated the funding for the proper maintenance and repairs. The school budget is the most significant. Why the neglect? Envision a new multi-million building with a similar attitude by the administration.

Let's take a fiscally responsible look at our future. A non-bias evaluation of the Osgood School by someone interested in the town's well-being should be addressed. Stop the proposed building. Further investigation into reviving and expanding the Osgood School is critical at this time. You are fortunate to be able to reverse the April ballot decision. Be at the special town meeting Monday, Aug. 12. Your vote to correct a wrong decision will be decided there.

New school will increase property values, reader says

To the Editor:

As a Cohasset resident of 25 years, I would like to explain why a new elementary school is in my best interest as a taxpayer. (As a parent, I will not directly benefit from improved facilities, since my three children have graduated from Cohasset schools.)

As we all know, Cohasset is a beautiful seaside town with a very special quality of life. But within the South Shore, we aren't unique in having a pristine environment, colonial homes or ocean accessibility. The difference, I would submit, is due largely to our excellent school system.

The cost of a new school for taxpayers is, for all intents, the same as that of renovating the Osgood school. The very slight difference in dollars spent on temporarily extending the life of an unsuitable building, plus the cost of portable classrooms, is wasteful.... We can defer the inevitable but not avoid it. Regrettably, some of our citizens seem unwilling to learn from the past .... Deferring necessary changes (e.g. the sewer system) inevitably costs us more than does timely change, particularly when state funding is available to us.

Our elected officials and appointed board members have spent hundreds of hours studying our school needs. They, too, are taxpayers and care about the financial health of Cohasset. I find it disappointing and disturbing that many current opponents did not choose to get involved in the lengthy process which led to near-unanimous official support for a new school. It's easy to come up with simplistic alternatives at the eleventh hour, but these proposals seem to be self-serving and financially unsound. Unless we proceed with the school project now, I fear that our property values will be negatively impacted for years to come.

In the final analysis, my support for a new elementary school is selfish. The average tax cost of approximately $111/year (based on Cohasset's average home value of $300,000) is very small, indeed, to sustain and enhance my investment as a homeowner.

The decision to invest in a new facility that meets modern-day standards and requirements is financially sound. It has been made in the right way, by people who have spent months studying all alternatives. As a "selfish" taxpayer, I urge everyone to vote "No" on reconsideration.

'No' vote Article 1 urged

To the Editor:

In listening to the comments and questions raised by citizens, we've heard people express two major reasons for stopping the new school project with a "Yes" vote on Article 1. Some citizens continue to think that we will save money by fixing up the Osgood building. In fact, a minimal "fix up" of the Osgood (simply making the building safe and providing needed classroom space in portable classrooms) will cost Cohasset taxpayers $3.9 million. This is essentially the same price that we will pay for the new school with state funding. A more substantial renovation to meet projected educational needs will cost between $5.6 and $7.6 million. Regardless of what you may have heard, the facts are clear.

For $4 million we can get either:

— a brand new, $10 million, up-to-date facility or — a partially renovated 70-year-old building which will still need to be replaced in a few years.

A renovation of the Osgood School is impractical from a fiscal standpoint.

The second concern that has been raised is that the site and design are flawed, and we must stop the project to keep from making regrettable mistakes. In fact, the design of the new school is an ongoing process, and the committees involved have and will continue to welcome questions and concerns of all residents. This input has already made a difference, and it will continue to do so. We can keep responding to citizens' concerns without stopping the process and jeopardizing our place on the state funding list. Just for the record, the current design has been planned and studied by experts including your elected and appointed Town Boards. The design conforms to every applicable regulation in the town, county, and state. Nonetheless, it's clear that active involvement from town residents has made a good design even better.

If you care about protecting your tax dollars from waste, vote "No" on Article 1. If you care about the design of the new school, vote to keep moving forward with this open and collaborative design process by voting "No" on Article 1 — and then keep making your concerns known to the school facilities/building committee. If you care about giving our children the educational environment they deserve, vote for the new school Cohasset so desperately needs by voting "No" on Article 1.

School opponents are off base

To the Editor:

I have been trying to make sense out of the opponents to the new school and their opinions. I cannot. Here's why.

I have gone to many school facilities meetings since September 1995. These were all open public meetings which always encouraged questions or concerns to be aired.

There are five members on the School Committee and nine members on the School Facilities Committee. Out of 14 men and women, only one has children young enough to attend a new school. These men and women will also be paying taxes—so why would they want a new school?

Because the present Osgood School has too many costly and dangerous issues, i.e., not handicapped accessible, fire hazards, wood-framed building, no sprinklers, to name just a few. Then add to that list that there is no cafeteria, no real gymnasium and not enough classrooms.

To bring the present school up to state requirements for an adequate elementary school, the cost will be at least $3.6 million.

As already voted, a new building, including adequate parking and play areas, will be $9.8 million, less 60 percent state reimbursement, which gives us $4 million. And let's remember the possible sale of the old Osgood to reduce the $4 million debt even more.

So, as I sit here, I am confident of this — we will be paying higher taxes. There is no way out of this. We have to do something. But will it be: $3.6 million-plus in renovations or $4 million or less with the sale of Osgood?

There is another thing I am confident of — the men and women on both the School Committee and Facilities Committee and Superintendent Steve Hart are honorable. Their intentions are to do the best for this town with the least costly effect on us all. They have no vested interest in a new school. But, as we all do, they have a vested interest in this great town. That is why the best thing to do for our town and our tax dollars is to build, not renovate!

Please show your support to build by voting no on Article 1 at the Special Town Meeting Aug. 12.

New school not warranted

To the Editor:

Some of us who are opposed to the building of a new elementary school are not opposed to education or to progress, but we are concerned about the sudden and precipitous manner in which such a heavy spending item has been inflicted on the entire community.

But that concern alone is not enough. We are also concerned about the demographics of Cohasset, a town which has hundreds and hundreds of homes with no children at all, and many hundreds more with only one child, and this in a town of only 2,500 homes.

If a fence were built around Cohasset, so that no one could enter or leave, we would probably be a ghost town within a century.

With only a few families who are an exception to the rule, we are not even replacing ourselves as a town.

Such facts do not seem to warrant the building of a new school at the present time.

Trees are priority with new school abutters

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

Trees were the root of discussions at the July 18 conservation commission hearing on the new school site.

For different reasons, both commission members, and abutters on Old Pasture Road, say that a swath of trees behind the school is important.

The plans presented to the commission two weeks ago , which moved the school an additional 40 feet from Old Pasture Road, showed grassy playing fields extending from the back of the school up to the property lines of abutters.

Commission members said that wildlife uses the wooded area (located behind the school in the plans) to get to necessary habitat that would be located on the other side of the building.

The denseness of the woods would afford wildlife more protection than a grassy lawn, said commission members.

Abutters maintain that they were told there would be a 30-foot wooded area between their homes and the school, which would help screen their property.

"Why is it that when we are gaining area, we are losing trees?" asked Elaine Breslow, 90 Old Pasture Road.

Landscape Architect Joseph Geller said that the original plans depicted a flat area behind the school which extended almost up to property lines. The trees in the plan were new plantings.

He added that because of the slope of the property, a fair amount of grading, which requires tree and underbrush removal, had to be done behind the school.

Geller said it was unclear how many feet of trees they could include as a buffer, but would look into it and present suggestions at the next hearing.

Conservation Commission Chairman Thomas Callahan said that the additional playing fields closer to Deer Hill School, which were tentatively included in the plan, may be an answer.

Geller said that the area could be cleared for a Little League field and a soccer field.

"That might be an acceptable alternative to creating play space behind the school," said Callahan.

Commission member Michael Dick suggested eliminating the parking in front of the new school, and using that area for playing fields.

Additional parking could be created at the Deer Hill School.

The plans also showed that two detention basins were combined into one, which opened up more room for playing fields.

The commission said they needed further drainage calculations before they decided if one drainage basin would be sufficient.

Wetlands consultant Sandy Brock explained that she didn't want to undertake the extensive drainage calculations, until she knew whether or not the commission approved of the new location of the school.

At an earlier meeting, some members had suggested that the school be moved into the wetland buffer zone, which still falls under the commission's jurisdiction.

Callahan said the commission tentatively approved of the move, but needed the calculations and some time to study the wildlife survey.

He said he was particularly concerned with how the changed drainage would affect the vernal pool, which has a high habitat value.

Brock replied that the vernal pool had been taken into account.

Additionally, the detention basin could be valuable habitat. It would control storm water and replicate some lost habitat.

Callahan agreed.

"I'd like to see them made into creative wetlands," he said. "Then (the basin) would have habitat value as well as water quality value."

The new school proposal will come before the commission again on Aug. 22, at 8:30 p.m., in the town hall.

"You have to do some work to do, and so do we," said Callahan.

Hedlund and Delahunt trade barbs

Incumbent accused of 'ineffectiveness,' challenger of 'opportunism'

By STEVE ADAMS
Cohasset Mariner

Democratic state senate candidate Robert Delahunt accuses Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, of "dropping the ball" on Title V relief for his constituents, who are struggling to meet the state septic code's requirements and pay for its cost.

But Hedlund describes the charges as "totally absurd" and motivated by "political opportunism."

Hedlund said he helped draft 19 proposed revisions to the Title V septic code last summer. Some of those were adopted by the state Department of Environmental Protection last fall.

The most important, Hedlund said, jettisoned "by definition" inspection criteria, such as inadequate setback from wetlands, in favor of performance-based standards.

"I was literally six months ahead of the curve. It took me pounding to get the attention of my colleagues," Hedlund said. "The urban legislators, for the most part, couldn't care less."

But Delahunt said as a Republican, Hedlund should have wielded more influence with the Weld administration in bringing about administrative changes to the Title V code.

"If he had influence with anyone, it would presumably be the Republican-controlled DEP," Delahunt said.

Delahunt also was critical of Hedlund's legislative record.

Two weeks ago, Hedlund sponsored an amendment — which failed by one vote — to provide a 40 percent tax credit for Title V repairs, up to a maximum of $6,000.

Delahunt offered that vote's failure as evidence of Hedlund's ineffectiveness as a senator.

"These communities have had to stand by while Bob Hedlund repeatedly fails to pass the legislation or amend the budget in a way that would provide the assistance these communities need," Delahunt said.

Along with Weymouth and Hull, Hedlund's district includes the towns of Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Marshfield, Scituate and Cohasset, where the majority of the homes are on septic systems. Under Title V, homeowners cannot sell their properties until passing a septic inspection.

Hedlund met this week with Senate Ways and Means Chairman Stanley Rosenberg to discuss changes to the DEP low-interest loan program criteria to allow South Shore towns to qualify. Currently, the loans cannot be made available in towns which are partially sewered or exceed certain median income guidelines — excluding all of the towns in Hedlund's district.

Only $1.5 million has been expended from the $23 million DEP loan account established in 1994.

Hedlund said the tax credit would be a more effective relief measure for homeowners than the loans, but conceded the tax credits have a slimmer chance of passage.

Another amendment adopted by the Senate this week would no longer treat condominium septic systems as a single unit. Currently, if one shared septic system in a condominium development fails a Title V inspection, the entire condominium complex fails, holding up the sales of units.

That amendment needs to get through a House-Senate conference committee.

A question of qualifications

Delahunt's criticism of Hedlund's performance prompted a round of counter-charges by Hedlund, questioning his challengers' qualifications.

"For a guy who's never held a job outside of the one his cousin gave him to make those charges, is totally absurd," Hedlund said. "I'd suggest that the young Delahunt, having never paid a water and sewer bill or mortgage bill, probably doesn't know what he's talking about."

Delahunt defended his educational background and experience as more than sufficient to qualify him for the seat. A graduate of Thayer Academy, Colby College and Boston University Law School, Delahunt has been a prosecutor in the Norfolk County District Attorney's office for six years. His cousin, Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt, is a Democratic candidate for the 10th District congressional seat.

"I've always paid my bills and I'm not going to get into that discussion with Bob Hedlund. I'm not going to reduce this to that level," he responded.

Hedlund also criticized Delahunt for moving to Weymouth, the largest town in the district, from Norwell, which is in another senate district.

Delahunt stressed his family's deep ties to Weymouth. His great-grandfather moved to the town from Boston in 1919 and his grandfather was a Weymouth schoolteacher for 38 years.

"It isn't a question of moving back into the district," Delahunt said. "It's a question of returning to my roots."

Johnston campaign seeks volunteers

Volunteers are needed to assist the Phil Johnston for Congress campaign in Cohasset.

Johnston, a Democratic candidate for the 10th Congressional District, is running an aggressive campaign to succeed retiring U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds. Johnston's grassroots organization is reaching out into the 41 cities and towns in the district. Volunteers are needed for a variety of campaign activities.

Individuals interested in participating in the Johnston campaign may call Cohasset Coordinator Donna McGee at 383-9114.

Thursday, Aug. 22, Friends of Senator Bob Hedlund will host an evening with Broadway and TV star Harry Belafonte. There will be a reception at 7 p.m. at "The Ridges," home of Polly Logan, 121 Nichols Road, Cohasset, followed by the concert at the South Shore Music Circus, chairman Polly Logan announced.

Friends may attend the reception or concert only or may wish to attend both the concert and the reception Logan added. Sen. Hedlund will mix and mingle at the tent party and at intermission at the South Shore Music Circus with guest Harry Belafonte.

Belafonte world-wide concert tours have repeatedly sold out since 1956 and at the Music Circus he gives audiences a mix of traditional material like "Day O" (The Banana Boat Song), and "Island in the Sun" as well as new and redefined pieces.

Aerobics with a smile

Gini Waterman brings youthful enthusiasm to fitness classes

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The toughest part of Gini Waterman's job is the traveling.

But given that the personable aerobics instructor does all of her traveling on the South Shore, there's not much the Hanover resident can gripe about.

"The work part of it is the driving," Waterman said with a laugh.

The 50-something instructor is as much a motivator as an exercise team for the senior citizens, ranging in age from 65 to the late 80's, in her classes.

Certified by the Aerobics Fitness Association of America (AFAA) in 1985, Waterman has established a strong following at the Cohasset Swim Center, Webb's Health Club in Norwell, the River Bay Club in Quincy, and a number of other facilities on the South Shore.

And Waterman has as much respect for the people in her class, and their determination, as they have for her.

"They're just amazing to me," she said. "It keeps a vitality. It's very important for people to remain active. If a person continues moving and finds something they like to do, they're much better off.

"My job is to make it fun for people."

SeaDog Diamond Kings set for nationals

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

When the South Shore Baseball Club SeaDogs take the field for their opening game in the AAU National Baseball Championships in Burnsville, Minnesota, they'll be well represented by a group of local youngsters who've earned the right to play on the elite 12-year-old squad.

Five of the 14-player roster which makes up the state championship squad hails from the South Shore. Four are from Cohasset.

Cohasset's Greg Smith, Brendan Byrne, Nick Bolster, Ben Maitland, and Scituate's Jesse Cole will be winging their way to Minnesota tomorrow for the Aug. 2-10 tourney.

The fact that four team members hail from Cohasset speaks volumes for the town's baseball program, according to SeaDogs' head coach Peter Nesseralla of Braintree.

"That says a lot for Cohasset baseball," said Nesseralla. "It says great things for the town and its youth program."

Nesseralla is no stranger to competitive baseball and "big game" pressure. An All-Scholastic at Braintree High School, he was part of one state championship squad, two more in Braintree Legion and three for the Braintree White Sox of the Cranberry League. All told, Nesseralla has competed in five national tournaments and is confident his 13-1 SeaDog team is ready to face the best young baseball squads in the country.

"I'm ecstatic," he said. "Instead of holding tryouts, we went out and recruited the best young baseball players we could. We stacked the deck.

"We want to prove the South Shore Baseball Club can play at the national level."

The players, too, are looking forward to getting on the field.

"I'm very excited," said Byrne, the squad's second baseman. "It should be a lot of fun. People have said we're the best team from the South Shore Baseball Club ever to go to the nationals and that we have the best chance to go deep into the tournament.

"I'm a little nervous because I don't have as much experience as the other guys."

Byrne has played an important part in the team's success. A member of the Major League championship Dodger squad, Byrne blasted six home runs during the Cohasset Little League season. Byrne continued his power hitting on the AAU squad with a huge tourney day during a doubleheader in Worcester.

Byrne crushed a home run in each game for the SeaDogs, leading them to a sweep over the Bay State Bandits and Worcester Heat in their quest to the national finals.

Nesseralla expects Byrne will pick right off where he left off in the state tourney. Byrne was deadly at the plate with four home runs and 20 RBI in 14 games, not to mention his .600 batting average.

"He's just a phenomenal athlete," Nesseralla said. "You put an athlete in this situation and he's going to strive."

Although he is admittedly nervous, Byrne is confident the butterflies will disappear once he takes the field. From then

Clubs to co-sponsor sailing championships

The Mass Bay Sailing 1996 BayBank Junior Championships will be co-hosted this month by the Cohasset Yacht Club and the Cohasset Sailing Club just outside the the harbor breakwater. The competition is shaping up to be a dynamic sailing and social event. This regatta is predicted to draw over 300 junior sailors from around the Boston, North Shore and South Shore areas, all ranging from 7 years of age up through high school. There will be three full days of racing and social events covering from Aug. 13 to 15.

There will be class events for Optimists, Turnabouts, Lasers, and Club 420's during the three days of stiff competitive racing on the Bay. The hosts will be conducting green fleet races as well as a more competitive race series for the more experienced sailors.

Because of the wonderful sailing experiences during this regatta, the hosts have planned many social segments to help make the guests and their parents, the instructors, and whole planning force feel welcome. There will be a pizza party, a cookout, and a dance party for the participants, a cocktail party Tuesday evening for the adults at the Bancroft Hall above the harbor, and morning snacks and lunches will be provided throughout the race days. Many families of the local Cohasset sailors will be helping out by opening their homes to wayward sailors from north of Boston who require a place to stay during the regatta.

So, mark your calendars and set aside Aug. 13-15 for the BayBank Junior Championships outside of Cohasset Harbor, where the sailing promises to be fast and exciting on open Bay waters, and the social gatherings hosted by the Cohasset Yacht Club and the Cohasset Sailing Club will be just as memorable and fun for all of the participants.

Waterman brings enthusiasm to classes

Waterman teaches low-impact aerobics both on land and in water. She's at Webb's four days a week during the winter months, but conducts classes every day in several locations.

Waterman believes in the power of physical fitness, no matter what a person's age. And because a person's overall metabolism begins to slow down at the age of 35, she can't stress enough the importance of people to find an activity they like and stick with it.

Waterman doesn't necessarily believe exercise will adds years to your life, but "it adds life to your years."

People over the age of 65, Waterman believes, come from an era when they thought doctors knew everything, including fitness. Because of that, they are reluctant to take charge of themselves to do some type of exercise.

"They're not in your body," Waterman said of the doctors. "Sometimes people stop doing things because they're getting older."

If possible, Waterman says its a good idea for people to do some kind of weight lifting. She explained more calories must be burned to keep muscles alive, weight is loss, people feel better and they are all the more healthier.

But not all people are able to use weights because they are too weak and in wheelchairs. Waterman conducts a 30-minute session at the Hollingsworth House in Braintree and is sure to keep the workout stress-free. Some of the people in the class have Alzheimer's Disease and others are restricted to wheelchairs. Waterman's classes, though, do serve an important purpose by keeping the elderly moving. And it is still an exercise program which can only benefit those in the class.

"It's movement to music for them," she said.

What is especially refreshing about Waterman's approach to her work is that she doesn't take it for granted. The energy she brings to the workouts is contagious and carries over to the members of classes.

"God has been very good to me," she said. "I have a job where I can dance and sing."

Waterman, however, doesn't take credit for the improvements in health students make through her classes. They have to want to become more fit and in-tune with their health. She can only get them started in the right direction to a more healthy lifestyle.

"I love it when people say 'Gini, you got me started'," Waterman said. "I can't take credit for it, but I can give them a step."

Waterman is having too much fun at her job to even contemplate ever retiring from it. She sees absolutely no reason why she can't continue through to where she's as elderly as those in the class.

"I can be an old women up there in front, teaching other old women," she said with a laugh. "I plan to teach for as long as possible."

That means the elderly have a fitness guru in their corner for several years to come.

SeaDog Diamond Kings set for nationals

on in, he plans to concentrate solely on doing what's good for the team.

"I want to get out there, play hard and help the team out," Byrne said.

Bolster pitched six games during the season after recording a 6-1 record for the Cardinals in Cohasset Little League play. His best outing came against Rhode Island when he combined with Seekonk's Jay Laturante for a one-hitter.

Bolster pitched three innings and gave up the hit, but the batter was quickly erased when he was called out trying to stretch his hit into a double.

Bolster isn't sure just what kind of competition he'll be up against in Minnesota.

"I'm not sure how good the competition is out there," he said, "but I'm pretty sure we'll do well."

Nesseralla had high praise for all the players. Bolster, he said, didn't allow a run all season. Though coming off a broken hand, Bolster contributed to the team's cause with a perfect 2-0 record.

Smith, who batted .400 with eight RBI, has "matured more than any kid on the team," according to the coach.

"It's hard to say how much a 12-year-old kid has matured," Nesseralla said, " but Greg has become a real leader of this team."

Smith has proven to be a tough out for opposing pitchers. He batted a solid .400 in the tournament, but even more importantly, didn't strikeout a single time in all his at-bats.

Maitland, the SeaDogs' starting shortstop, hit .430 from the lead-off spot and led the team in both walks and stolen bases. Nesseralla said he defines the squad's offense and is the player who makes things happen to score runs.

"Our offense totally revolves around what he does," Nesseralla said. "He's the one who gets it moving."

Scituate's Jesse Cole is in a tough position at the moment. He is currently playing on his town All-Star team with a chance to advance in the Williamsport Tournament in Pennsylvania. The Little League World Series is beckoning and Cole won't be able to make the initial trip to Minnesota with the SeaDogs. Depending on how the Scituate team fares, Nesseralla may or may not have him for the nationals.

Cole put up good numbers as the SeaDogs' No. 2 pitcher with a perfect 3-0 record. Cole wasn't a slouch at the plate either, hitting over .400 with a home run and 14 RBI.

Locally, Kerry Cole, Nesseralla's assistant coach is also making the trip. Nesseralla said Cole has done a "phenomenal job with the team," and gives him much of the credit for the team's championship season.

"He's a great guy," Nesseralla said. "What I like the most about him is that he's a winner."

Add Cole to the list of locals who also fit into that "winner" category and it looks like the SeaDogs are on the right track to take on the rest of the country.

School facilities meeting tackles several topics

Parking, financing, and room layout

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

Due to a change in state law, Cohasset taxpayers won't have years of high taxes before reimbursement for the new school from the state kicks in.

Neighbors are concerned about potential parking problems and the location of the new school.

Architects brought the $9.9 million elementary school to life with discussions of the room layout.

In a nutshell, these were the issues that were discussed at the school facilities committee meeting on July 24.

Schools Supt. Stephen Hart said that a new state law enables towns to short-term borrow without paying the principal for five years. It was previously only two years.

Fleet Bank and the town accountant, Michael Buckley, have developed a new payment schedule, said Hart, which eliminates the years of high taxes (bubble years) before the state reimbursement begins.

Based on the median value of a house in Cohasset, which is $242,000, the tax rate would increase by an average of $99 a year, which is $8 a month or less than $2 a week, Hart said.

The maximum impact on the tax rate for a house of median value will be $121. The bubble years had originally required a payment of over $200.

"We are in a very advantageous position," said Hart.

Reached after the meeting, Buckley said that the new statute, which applies only to municipal school projects, will reduce the tax rate by approximately one-third during the bubble years.

The rates will be marginally more expensive for the other years, he added. The town will not receive money back after the 20-year bond is paid off, as it did under the previous funding formula, because the payment schedule has been lengthened.

Elaine Breslow of 90 Old Pasture Road said that she wanted the school facilities committee to reaffirm its position that the emergency access road would remain impassable to vehicles.

She was also concerned, as were others, that parents would park their cars on nearby Pleasant Street and Reservoir and Old Pasture Roads and walk their children down to the new school.

"I don't want it to be a drop off for children. Certainly kids will walk through there. They walk through there now," she said, speaking of the older children who use the path to walk or ride to Deer Hill School.

Hart said that the road would be blocked to traffic, and he would look into having the police safety officer stationed at the emergency road to discourage parents from parking on streets neighboring the school.

He added that he assumes most parents will drop their children at the front of the building because they would have a shorter distance to walk.

The four abutters on Old Pasture Road presented a letter to the committee which stated that they wanted a 30 foot-natural buffer of trees separating their homes from the school.

At an earlier meeting, School Facilities Chairman Robert Beggan asked the abutters if they preferred a fence or trees.

The letter stated that Hart had promised the group a 30-foot buffer.

"We are requesting that this promise be kept," stated the letter from the the Breslows, the Fosters, the O'Briens, and the O'Donnells.

Reached after the meeting, Hart said that the landscape plans he showed the abutters include a 30-foot buffer of vegetation from their property lines toward the school.

"I don't see any problem with (their request). That is part of the plan," he said.

Several abutters had circulated a petition which resulted in selectmen placing an article on the warrant for the Aug. 12 special town meeting that seeks to move the school.

The meeting was initially set to address another citizen petition calling for a reconsideration of the positive school vote.

A few of the proponents were on hand to ask why the architects couldn't move the school.

They maintained that the town could remain on the list for 60 percent state reimbursement if the school's footprint stayed the same and just the location was changed.

Architect Sid Bowen said that the building was designed for the particular site it is slated to be built on, and it "wouldn't work" on another site.

This is primarily because of the amount of ledge and the topography of the site, he explained.

George Gurnis of Reservoir Road said that the topography could be changed.

Bowen conceded that this was true, but said it was very expensive. He added that the site the abutters had proposed did not have adequate space for vehicles to turn around.

Jill O'Donnell said that she has studied the grade configurations of schools, and there were many in the state that had kindergarten through sixth grade housed in the same building.

Hart said that grade configuration could work, but it depends on the number of students.

Those systems could have a few elementary schools with 200 students each, not the approximately 800 students that Cohasset has, Hart said.

The design of the school has changed during recent weeks.

The exterior corners of the school are now straight, not angled as original plans showed.

This makes the building of the school easier, said Bowen, and also moves it an additional 16-feet from abutters, bringing their total distance from the school to 148 feet.

"We think we have done as much as we can in terms of movement, given the site and the invitation of the conservation commission," said Bowen.

He added that the most dramatic change in the building is that it has been flipped end to end.

In earlier plans, there was a detention basin on the east side of the building, which has since been combined with another basin. This move resulted in additional playing fields on that of the school.

The cafeteria was m[illegible] from the west side of the bu[illegible] to the east, and is now adj[illegible] to the playing fields.

The cafeteria, Bowen said, is one of the focal points of the building. It takes up two stories of the building and has approximately 20-feet of glass facing the outdoors in order to make the most of natural light.

The forum is another unique feature of the new school.

Upon entering the school, people will walk into a gazebo-like forum with a raised canopy. This area was designed so that groups of children could gather in an informal setting.

In the process of squeezing money and looking hard at the program, said Bowen, some components had to be curtailed.

Instead of a full stage, the gymnasium/auditorium will have a pull-out stage which will handle all of the productions for kindergarten through grade three, said Hart.

Not having a full stage, which would have taken up two levels, opened up space for a teachers' room on the second level.

School Facilities Member Robert Spofford said that a lot of dialogue and planning among town boards is taking place behind the scenes.

Members of his committee, the architects, and the design review board have been working diligently to address issues that have arisen, he said.

Big top ready for throng

It won't be a circus, officials say

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Specifics about where to park, sit and how voting will be handled at Monday's special town meeting under the big top at the Music Circus are being telecast on cable-TV channel 3.

A segment featuring Town Moderator George Marlette will be repeated continuously through the rest of the week and weekend so residents can tune in and have their town meeting site concerns addressed, said Continental Cablevision program director Bob Belliveau.

Monday's annual town meeting gets underway at 7:30 p.m. There are six articles on the warrant: two address the proposed new elementary school; one relates to the Straits Pond sewer project and another sets the stage for low-interest loans for septic system repairs; one asks money be appropriated to cover the cost of conducting the town meeting; and another asks for approval and funding of the Konohasset Clerical-Custodial Association contract.

Town meetings usually take place in the high school auditorium. When a large crowd is anticipated, the meetings are moved to the high school gym.

Selectmen decided to hold Monday's meeting at the Music Circus because because the high school gym is not air conditioned and would not be able to accommodate the expected turnout of upwards of 1,000 citizens.

The idea for an informational TV program followed a meeting to discuss logistical arrangements at the Music Circus on Monday morning with town officials, about a dozen residents, and the management of the entertainment venue.

Music Circus general manger Vincent Longo will arrange for appropriate lighting, wireless microphones and a crew to help direct parking. Residents will be

As it stands now, Straits Pond sewer petitioners will ask town meeting to re-vote the article passed at the March 30 town meeting asking the town to share 50 percent of the cost of installing sewers in North Cohasset.

If the Aug. 12 town meeting approves the article, selectmen will have to call for a Prop.2-1/2 override election within 45 days in accordance with state law.

If the override fails, sewer users will pay the entire cost of the project.

The latest chapter in the Straits Pond sewer saga is not what sewer commission chairman Ted Guild and those who signed the citizens petition article, asking for reconsideration of the project, had in mind when they attended a pre-town-meeting meeting Monday morning.

Ideally, they would all like to wrap the funding of the North Cohasset project in with Criminal charge against party host pending

Civil suit filed, attorney says

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

John Lennon, 47, of 57 Surry Drive faces a civil suit and a potential criminal charge for allegedly serving alcohol to teenagers at a June 22 graduation party at his Cohasset home.

Clerk Magistrate Stephen Abany heard the testimony of about nine minors including one juvenile, who were guests at the party, at a closed-door hearing which started Friday and continued Wednesday at Quincy District Court. After yesterday's session, Abany said he would decide Monday whether to charge Lennon with providing alcohol to a minor, which can carry a penalty of up to six months in prison and a fine of $2,000.

He said there was not enough evidence to charge Lennon with contributing to the delinquency of a minor. This charge pertains to juveniles (children who are under 17 years old).

If charged, Lennon has the right to appeal the clerk's decision before a judge. Quincy attorney Bernard Hamill, who is representing Lennon and cross-examined the witnesses, declined to comment on the case.

Police began investigating the party after an alcohol-related crash claimed the life of one of the guests, Gregory Smith, 18, of Marshfield. They sought charges against Lennon after several minors, who were guests at the party, came forward two weeks ago with allegations of being provided alcohol, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

Allan Tufankjian, a Brockton attorney representing Gregory Smith's parents Donald and Donna Smith of Marshfield, said a civil law suit against Lennon has already been filed in Brockton Superior Court and was a "direct result of them closing the door on us."

Abany did not allow members of the press and the public,

First village farmer's market draws a crowd

Change in location pondered

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Rainy weather did not keep upwards of 150 people away from the first village farmer's market, according to Dean Rizzo of Aquarius Sunrooms

Rizzo, who is vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, and Anna Abbruzzese of the Village Renaissance Committee, spearheaded the effort to bring a farmer's market to town.

The market will be held from 4 to 8 p.m., Thursdays through October.

Eight vendors took part and folk music provided the right touch, Rizzo said.

Although today's market will also be held in the town parking lot behind the Red Lion Inn, Rizzo said organizers will ask selectmen if it's possible to move the market to the town common off Long Road or to South Main Street. After informal chats with the police and fire chiefs to see if it's feasible, Rizzo will ask selectmen if part of South Main Street could be blocked off during market hours, the way Hingham Square is during that town's Summerfest and Christmas in the Square celebrations.

"We did have complaints about the location," which was in the back of the town parking lot near the railroad tracks, Rizzo said.

Bringing the farmer's market to town is part of an on-going effort to revitalize Cohasset Village.

Farmer's market vendor Darlene Beauvais gives Charles Mundhenk a hand with the produce he purchased. Today's market is from 4 to 8 p.m. in the town parking lot.

Residents are named to two town boards

Last week, selectmen appointed Benjamin H. Lacey, 181 Jerusalem Rd., to the zoning board of appeals and Benjamin F. Curley, 10A Ash St. to the private ways committee.

Curley is a retired superintendent of the water department and knows every street in town, Selectman Peter Pratt said.

Lacey is a retired lawyer, Selectman Nan Roth said.

"He is very experienced, very thorough," Roth said.

Baby-sitting options for town meeting

Kathy Ofsthun, PSO president, said the PSO has worked with the schools, the recreation department, the Community Center, and local teens to provide baby-sitting during Monday's Special Town Meeting. Two options are available:

- From 7 to 11 p.m., teens will supervise children at the Deer Hill School. The gym will be open for play and a movie will be shown. Missy Walker, director of the KEDS Program, will also be at the school to provide adequate controls such as a system of signing in and out.
- Pre-teens recently certified through the Community Center's baby-sitting program are available for in-home sitting. If you are interested in this list, please contact Ofsthun at 383-9396.

Ranking validates school space needs, Hart says

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset's new school could be eligible for state reimbursement in three years as opposed to five, school officials said this week.

According to town accountant Michael Buckley, receiving state money earlier could save Cohasset taxpayers about $400,000 in interest costs over the life of the bond issue.

The state provides about $14 million annually to qualifying communities building or expanding school facilities through its school building assistance program. Cohasset's project is ranked 14th of the 64 submitted this year. Rankings are prioritized according to need.

Supt. Stephen Hart said the state ranking shows the state agrees that Cohasset is facing a school-space crunch.

"It validates our need for a new facility," he said.

But Roy Fitzsimmons, spokesman for Concerned Cohasset Taxpayers a group opposed to the school, said the news does not make the project any more palatable.

He questioned whether the state would continue to fund the program at current levels.

"There is nothing in concrete on that," he said.

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said while future year appropriations for school building assistance are subject to legislative approval, there is virtually no chance that the state will cut back the program.

"It will be funded without question," he said. "It has been since the program was implemented in the 1940s."

According to the state Department of Education, the state provides funding reimbursement for the projects left over from last year first and then goes down the list of those submitted this year.

Because 58 projects were carried over from last year, Cohasset is now 72 on the list out of a total of 122.

Projects vary and the state assumes 50-90% of the project costs, depending on the wealth of the community. Cohasset is eligible for 60% reimbursement.

Because costs and percentages of reimbursements vary, the number of projects funded in any given year also varies. But by adding the state's authorization figures on the projects listed ahead of Cohasset, it is likely Cohasset will start receiving state reimbursement in three years, Hart pointed out.

With reimbursement in three years, about $1 million would be saved in interest costs for the total project. The town would share the savings on a 60/40 basis with the state.

The School Building Assistance Act is designed to help communities undertake important school projects, state officials say, and money is provided to offset the projects' costs and interest charges on borrowing.

School articles get tune-up

Petitioners say they'll be ready for town meeting

If approved, the re-drafted citizens' petition article asking to reconsider the favorable March 30 town meeting vote on the school will stop the $9.9 million project and prevent any more money from being spent on it.

The other citizens' petition article asking the school site to be moved closer to Deer Hill School needs more work, Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said Monday.

DeRensis provided guidance on the appropriate phraseology for the articles at a standing-room only, pre-town meeting meeting Monday in the selectmen's office.

Wording in the original articles is flawed, selectmen said. They gave the proponents time to work on new drafts which were presented Monday.

Article one will ask voters to rescind the positive March 30 vote on the school and terminate any future funding for the project. If passed, the article will nullify the April 6 override to pay for the new elementary school.

DeRensis said that Article 6, the school-site article, must reference specific plans and be more definite about "proper" orientation, ventilation, and so on.

Proponents of the school-site citizens petition said they would work with their attorney Charles Humphreys of Cohasset to re-write their article and have it ready for the Aug.12 special town meeting.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

TITLE INSURANCE

QUESTION: What is title insurance and how does it work?

ANSWER: Title insurance spares the buyer from parting with his purchase money and THEN discovering a flaw in the title. Public title records are not always completely accurate. There may be errors or omissions in recording deeds or mortgages, assessments and judgments. Title insurance protects the buyer against "clouds" in the title to the property — but only against undisclosed defects, not those KNOWN at the time the policy is issued. There is only a one-time premium and coverage continues as long as you or your heirs hold title to the property.

Issue to be aired at town meeting the 440 homes in Central Cohasset which is the next part of town slated for installation of sewers. A combined override for both projects would likely garner more support because more homeowners would be affected.

An override, representing half the cost of sewering 345 homes in North Cohasset, failed by 34 votes at the ballot box May 4. That override followed a favorable vote on the sewer article at the March 30 town meeting.

Since then, a group of North Cohasset residents have kept the project before the town through public statements and letters to town officials and newspapers. They feel being asked to pay 100 percent of the cost of sewering their part of town is unprecedented and unfair.

They said this week they are prepared to fight for the new override and will work hard to convince their counterparts in Central Cohasset that supporting a 50/50, user/town shared-payment plan for North Cohasset will ultimately benefit them.

"There was not enough education done," Maria Plante, 790 Jerusalem Road, said about the prior override. "We are not looking to kill the project but we do want to be treated fairly."

Wording of the citizens' petition sewer article, which appears in the warrant is flawed, selectmen said.

Before Monday's meeting, sewer commissioners and North Cohasset residents worked together to redraft the citizens petition article, which asked to reconsider approval for the project. They planned to ask that their article be indefinitely postponed at Monday's town meeting. But included in the redraft of the article was a resolution asking town meeting to memorialize its support for shared funding between the town and users — a vote proponents want in the official town meeting record.

Town Moderator George Marlette does not allow resolutions, which are non-binding, because they can get out of hand. He explained he turned down requests at the annual town meeting last spring for resolutions on what should be done about the Hagerty property and the writing of a new town history.

He only allowed a resolution on the train at a special town meeting in Oct. 1994 because proponents of the flawed article were not notified in time.

Marlette noted that proponents of the sewer citizens' petition have had adequate notice to re-draft their article.

Proponents rejected a suggestion to have their article redrafted to direct selectmen to form a committee to investigate the shared-funding proposal. A committee reporting on the "ways and means of accomplishing" the funding of the project is a legal way to include their intent in an article, DeRensis explained.

Marlette, who routinely conducts a pre-town meeting meeting to iron out details relating to articles on the warrant, called the 8:30 a.m. meeting among several town officials the chairmen of the selectmen and advisory board.

Representatives of the North Cohasset group met again with Guild and other town officials later Monday morning and decided to bring the March 30 town meeting sewer article back before voters on Monday.

Last month, selectmen unanimously voted to assure the people of North Cohasset that a future sewer override would include at the least, a town/user shared plan for the North and Central Cohasset sewer projects. They went on record that they expect to combine overrides for the two projects into a single Prop.2-1/2 override question when the Central Cohasset project is brought before town meeting (probably next spring).

But proponents of the Straits' Pond citizen petition said Monday they do not want to wait until the Central Cohasset project comes before town meeting next year to resolve the funding issue.

Without cost sharing, North Cohasset homeowners will pay $870 a year for 20 years in betterment charges for the sewer and Central Cohasset will pay $850. This does not include maintenance and operation costs of the system.

asked to park in the lower lot and enter through the gate closest to the Osgood School. There will be spaces for the handicapped in the upper lot.

Police detail officers will provide traffic control.

Arrangements will also be made for rear projector and a 12 x 12 ft. screen for presentations.

The main concession stand will be open. Soft drinks and coffee will be available with proceeds going to the Milliken Field project, said Clark Chatterton, who runs the concession and is also athletic director at the high school. Twenty-one students have volunteered their time to work at the concession, he said.

Voters will be asked to enter the tent through aisles five and eight where two tables with checkers will be at both sides of the entrances. Citizens will be asked to sit in the 1552 seats between aisles three and nine. There will also be a section for the press and non-voters.

Children will not be allowed at town meeting during the debate, Town Moderator George Marlette said. However, for those parents, who may feel uncomfortable leaving their children at the Deer Hill School where the PSO has set up a baby-sitting service, the sound system will be set up so anyone outside the tent can hear the debate. When it's time to vote, those parents will be alerted, Marlette said.

Marlette explained that under state law, he has the right to ban children from town meeting. At the annual town meeting, there were complaints, especially from senior citizens who had trouble hearing the debate, that children were being disruptive.

Longo said if it's a hot night the tent cupola will be open and the side flaps will be up.

He said the Music Circus — whose parent company, the South Shore Playhouse Associates, is a non-profit corporation — is happy to donate use of the facility to the town.

"We exist to put money back into the community and other non-profit groups," he said. "We're happy to get involved and be here when people need us."

The Music Circus also donates use of the tent for Cohasset High graduations and this year for the first time, for Deer Hill sixth-grade graduation.

Town meeting will be televised live on Channel 3 with local talk-show host Wigmore Pierson providing commentary.

Decision on criminal charge against party host is pending including Tufankjian to attend the hearing. Cohasset Det. Rick Grassie, who is a potential witness, was also excluded.

Tufankjian said a civil suit is the only avenue open to his clients to find out what happened to their son.

Abany said he would hold off issuing the crimnal complaint until Monday to give the parties time to think about it over the weekend because "sometimes something can be worked out. Sometimes lessons have been learned."

Tufankjian said it was absurd to expect the grieving parents (the Smiths) to sit down with the Lennons. He also pointed out that Hamill had instructed Lennon not to talk to the Smiths.

Abany said there was ample evidence that teenagers were drinking at the party.

"There was plenty of evidence that alcohol was available to Thayer graduates at the party," he said. But Abany said evidence presented on the charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor was unclear.

Abany said "in the interest of justice and impartiality" he sequestered the witnesses so they could not be influenced by each other. He only allowed one witness at a time and his or her parents into the hearing room. He cautioned the teenagers, who waited outside in the hall, not to discuss their testimony with one another.

Eight witnesses, all minors, testified at Friday's session, which lasted about 90 minutes. One more, a juvenile whom police say is 16 years old, testified yesterday.

Nina Flaherty, spokeswoman for the District Attorney's office, said the juvenile couldn't testify last week due to illness.

Assistant District Attorney Jon Barooshian is the state's prosecutor on the case.

Police said a bartender at the party served the adults but they believe there was also a keg of beer in another area from which teens were drinking openly. Lennon hosted the party to celebrate his son's graduation from Thayer Academy in Braintree and his daughter's college graduation.

Though he would not specify the blood-alcohol count, Noonan said Gregory Smith's blood alcohol level revealed he had been drinking.

On August 12, the children of Cohasset ask the adults to say "no."

BUILD A NEW SCHOOL FOR COHASSET WITH $6 MILLION OF STATE MONEY.

VOTE NO ON MONDAY, AUGUST 12.

In the past two years, nearly 100 public meetings have been held to reach the current design for the new school. And 34 members of the Board of Selectmen, School Committee, Advisory Board, Capital Budget Committee, and School Facilities Committee have voted in favor of the project.

And no wonder. Of the $9.9 million it will take to build the school, $6 million will come from the state. If we choose to renovate instead of build, we will get no state aid whatsoever.

But that didn't stop a small group of Cohasset citizens from exercising their right to have the Town Meeting vote taken in March reconsidered at a Special Town Meeting on Monday, August 12.

That's why we need your NO vote on August 12. VOTE NO and you vote against reconsideration. VOTE NO and you support the generations of Cohasset children who deserve a superior education. VOTE NO and you support the town officials that you elected and appointed to make decisions in the best interest of Cohasset residents.
VOTE NO ON MONDAY, AUGUST 12.

Benefit at St. Joseph Villa Retreat Center, a success!

Let's begin by sending belated wedding anniversary greetings and best wishes to Mary and John Campbell. They had their special day Aug. 1, celebrating 58 years of marriage!

Remember the fund-raiser that was held by the Sisters to benefit the Retreat Center (St. Joseph's Villa)? Well, here are a few pictures to let you see what you missed — such fun! Dinner was yummy, and the Phil Coulter show at South Shore Music Circus capped off the evening wonderfully well! And, as you can see by the list of prize winners for the raffle that was held July 22, everything was successful. The Villa Retreat Center will be better than ever, thanks to all the hard work and your donations!

Have you seen Rod and Marilyn Hobson walking around with their heads in the clouds for the past month or so? Well, here is the reason for their glee — her name is Melissa Hobson Alves, born July 9 at Mount Auburn Hospital. Mom and Dad, Mark and Abigail Alves, are oh so happy, and Melissa's paternal grandparents, Roland and Carol Alves, couldn't be happier. Enjoy a wonderful summer with your brand-new baby!

The weather wasn't the best, but everything else at the first Cohasset Village Farmers' Market was superb! It promises to be better with each passing week. So, go tonight (Thursday) from 4 to 8 p.m. If unable to go tonight, why not go next week? The market will be held right through Sept. 26. The market area is located in the municipal parking lot (in front of the old garage) behind the Village.

Word comes to us from the College of the Holy Cross that Kimberly Steimle has been named to the dean's list for the second semester. Kimberly, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund A. Steimle of Cohasset, graduated as a Patriot League Scholar. She is majoring in Spanish.

Alexander Gaston, a freshman at Holderness School, Plymouth, N.H., has been named to the school's spring semester honor roll. This spring Alexander, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Gaston III of Cohasset, also took part in Holderness' campus-wide student jobs program, sang in the school chorus and played on the boys' junior varsity tennis team.

Ryan L. Staszko, a sophomore at Tabor Academy, has been named by Headmaster Jay Stroud to the honors list for the second semester. Honors are conferred on students with an average of 80, allowing one grade between 75-79. He is the son of Donald Staszko and Dr. Barbara O'Pray of Cohasset.

Plans are in the works for a huge new field opening Sept. 8. Everyone is really getting excited! Won't it be nice to have a wonderful field, under lights?! Watch for details concerning the opening!

That's the news from here for the week. Please don't forget to include us in your newsworthy event!

Oh yes, happy belated birthday greetings go to Brendan Mulcahy — I wonder how many cakes he will get this year? He always manages to get at least three!

Harold Williams Thistlethwaite

Harold Williams Thistlethwaite, 86, of Cohasset, formerly of Winchester and Arlington, died Saturday, July 6, at home after a lengthy illness. Mr. Thistlethwaite was superintendent of many industrial plants in the New York and New England areas and was manager of the tar products division of Koppers Co. based in Pittsburgh, Penn.

He was active in Masonic affairs; a 32nd degree Mason, an Aleppo Temple Shriner and a member of all the York and Scottish Rite bodies. He was a DeMolay dad for many years in Winchester and was associated with the Boy Scouts as well. He will be remembered as a true friend dedicated to Masonry.

He was also a member of Ahepa (American Hellenic Educational Progressive Association) and was one of the founders of the Greek Orthodox Church in Cohasset. He was an active member up until the time of his illness, enjoying his participation in the church's major fundraiser, the annual Fourth of July Greek Festival in Cohasset.

Besides his involvement in numerous clubs and organizations, he enjoyed politics, golf, choral music, theater, sports and reading. He and his wife traveled extensively.

He leaves his wife of 41 years, Eleanor (Anifantis); two brothers, Richard Edgar Thistlethwaite of Jefferson, Penn., Thomas Howard Thistlethwaite of Philadelphia, Penn.; and several nieces and nephews.

Masonic graveside services were held July 27 at the Thistlethwaite family plot in Greene County Memorial Park, Waynesburg, Penn.

A 40 day memorial service will be held 10 a.m. Sunday, Aug. 18, at Panagia Greek Orthodox Church, 819 Jerusalem Road in Cohasset. Relatives and friends are invited.

Memorial gifts in Mr. Thistlethwaite's memory may be sent to Jefferson Baptist Church, Box 218, Jefferson, PA 15344 or to Panagia Greek Orthodox Church Building Fund, 810 Jerusalem Rd., Cohasset, 02025.

EDITORIAL

It's time for Joseph Osgood 3rd

The original Joseph Osgood School, built in 1890, stood where the police and fire stations now are.

The Joseph Osgood School 2nd — initially named the Ripley Road School which served as the high school — was built in 1927 when Calvin Coolidge was president.

Today's Cohasset High School followed in 1951 and finally Deer Hill was completed in 1955 — 41 years ago.

As you can see — the town hasn't been in the business of building schools for more than four decades — longer than many of today's Osgood School parents have been alive.

If you oppose the new school because of the cost and effect on your taxes — we ask you to consider the following facts:

• Through the School Building Assistance Act, the state is paying for 60 percent of the total project costs including interest charges.

• The state has ranked Cohasset 14th in level of need out of the 64 projects submitted by this year's June 1 deadline — not only does this validate the town's need for a new facility, but the priority placement means Cohasset could start receiving state reimbursement sooner than expected saving the town about $400,000 in interest charges.

• New state legislation also allows towns with municipal school building projects to borrow over the short term for up to five years. This takes the spike out of the "bubble years" when taxes on the typical home valued at $242,000 would have jumped to more than $200 annually until state reimbursement kicked in.

• Owners of a $242,000 home will see an average increase of $100 or about $2 a week in their annual tax bill over 20 years to pay for the new school.

• The cheapest alternative to building a new school would involve partial rehabilitation of the existing Osgood School with no addition. Portable classrooms would be used. Cost: $3.9 million, which is as much as the town's share of constructing a new school. The aging Osgood School does not qualify for state reimbursement.

• A new school could drive up property values — portable classrooms at the rear of Osgood could have a negative effect on values.

• The existing Osgood School could be sold and returned to the tax rolls helping the town recoup more of the cost of building a new school. Take a look at Central School in Scituate, which was turned into apartments for senior citizens.

• Rising enrollments are a fact of life. Many of Cohasset's elderly citizens will eventually sell their homes. Families with children will continue to move into town. If you think Cohasset is too expensive for young families, please take a look at Conservatory Park in Hingham — it is full of $600,000 homes and there are plenty of kids' bicycles in those driveways.

In 1927 — the year Osgood was built, Charles A. Lindbergh made the first solo flight across the Atlantic. It took him 33-1/2 hours to fly from New York to Paris. That same year, 'The Jazz Singer' with Al Jolson was the first major motion picture to use synchronized sound.

Clearly, it's time to retire Osgood as a school.

Cohasset has a choice on Monday: to live in the past or move into the future. We urge you to cast your vote for the next generation — vote No on Article One. Let the school project go forward.

— Mary Ford

Reasons behind debate flap detailed

To the Editor:

Many of your readers, as well as those who tune in to the local cable television channel, were led to believe that proponents and opponents of Cohasset's new elementary school would debate the issue on Wigmore Pierson's cable show Aug. 4. Unfortunately, such was not to be the case.

We believe all Cohasset residents have the right to know why this debate was cancelled. Perhaps the following chronology will be helpful.

The School Committee and School Facilities/Building Committee agreed to the debate at the request of Mr. Pierson. Then the so-called Concerned Cohasset Taxpayers group demanded the right to reject members of our team, including the Superintendent of Schools and the project architects. In order to save the debate so Cohasset residents would have an opportunity to hear the truth about the project, we reluctantly agreed to replace the Superintendent.

Then CCT demanded the show's format be changed from a debate to two separate monologues. Mr. Pierson gave in to this demand and changed the format of the show before speaking with us. We pointed out that this same group had forced a costly special Town Meeting on the new school project, claiming there had been insufficient debate. So their refusal to debate was puzzling to us. However, we again agreed to appear in order to preserve Cohasset residents' ability to get more information about the new school.

CCT then demanded the right to appear last on the now four-part show, following presentations on the new school, the equally contentious sewer issue and the appearance of Cohasset selectmen. It is clear that CCT wanted an opportunity to have the last word on these issues. Mr. Pierson cancelled the show without ever asking us if we would be willing to compromise a third time by appearing first. We would have done so, albeit it reluctantly.

Make no mistake about it. This debate was killed by the arrogance of the supposedly Concerned Taxpayers and their unwillingness to play fairly. We deeply regret that our fellow citizens have been deprived of the opportunity to have the issue debated openly, with rebuttal from each side, in a public forum tailor-made for such an occasion.

Cohasset Village rail stop is opposed

The following is an open letter to Cohasset citizens. A copy was also sent to the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

To the Editor:

I feel your plans for a train stop in Cohasset Village are disgraceful.

A train stop with the size of public parking you are proposing would aesthetically ruin the Village, and ruin parking for everyone else going about their daily business locally. A train would bring in dirt, trash, noise, dangerous crossings, indigent individuals and crime. This has been proven to be true by experiences in other small communities around the United States in which a commuter railroad has been forced through the area (See U.S. News and World Report, Aug. 15, 1994, p. 18, "Lock the House, Here Comes the Train").

People come to Cohasset because it is a beautiful place to live and visit. Let's not change that, ever.

Service project volunteers say 'thanks'

To the Editor:

The 1996 Appalachia Service Project volunteers have returned home to Cohasset, deeply touched by the memories of their week in the hills of West Virginia. Eighty-four Cohasset high school students, college CITS and adult advisers worked hard repairing the homes of needy families. They shingled roofs, built porches, sheetrocked ceilings, replaced floors and dug trenches, making each home safer, drier and warmer for the families they grew to love in this one intense week of fellowship.

Cohasset can be proud of its teen-agers "building bridges" with others less fortunate than they are. One truly memorable job was the construction of a 25-foot bridge across a creek for a lonely 84-year-old man "marooned" in his home, unable to reach the road and shut off from the world. By the week's end, he walked hand in hand with our kids across his new bridge to a joyful reunion with his family.

ASP volunteers would like to express heartfelt gratitude to every one of our loyal supporters. Thank you to everyone who bought Thanksgiving pies or Super Bowl subs, who had their leaves raked or their cars washed and who contributed children's books or bought "stock." Without generous friends and neighbors like you, this trip would not have been possible. We return to Cohasset with new insights and a deeper sense of community.

New school is an investment in future

To the Editor:

For many years, I lived in a small city which was distinguished by two characteristics: the failure of that community to provide adequate facilities for its schoolchildren and an inability among its citizenry to discuss the issues civilly and rationally. Sadly, I found the same problems existent in Cohasset, the town I have called home for almost two years.

The most salient feature of the school system of my former hometown was the age of its school buildings. Whether some wish to admit it, school buildings are like most things — they have a useful life suitable for the times in which they were built. But at some point, they no longer can serve the needs of those who must utilize them years later.

Schools are not merely buildings; they are places of learning which must change with the times. My former home city had the oldest schools in the state. As in Cohasset, efforts to replace the old and inadequate schools met with decades of inaction. Those who refused to face reality, or who opposed new schools for other, self-motivating reasons, continually thwarted the efforts of those who wished to have the schools move forward.

The results are predictable: the school system declined; new families stopped moving into the city; those who already were living there fled; and property values fell precipitously as neighboring school districts, which modernized their school facilities, proved more attractive to homeowners with children.

I fully understand the plight of those senior citizens of modest means who live on fixed incomes for whom the increase in property taxes will be a hardship. I will not engage in platitudes about the necessity or desirability of sacrificing for the future of the children of this community, because I realize such statements are not a sufficient counterweight to the economic concerns of the present.

However, those for whom the extra $200-$300 per year will not represent a serious economic burden should consider the simple fact that the money each of us will be investing in a new school will bring us a substantial return in the form of greater property values for our homes. I suspect most of those opposed to a new school have not bought a home recently. I suggest they look in the real estate pages of the Globe on any given Saturday (or call any local real estate broker), because in the profiles of communities, the chief topic of any list is the quality of the school system.

It is a given that communities such as ours have low crime rates and nice homes; what distinguishes one from the others when homebuyers consider where to raise a family is the quality of the public schools. It is a penny-wise and pound-foolish proposition to decide the Cohasset school system should not move forward. When a future headline in the South Weekly section of the Boston Globe informs readers throughout the South Shore that our elementary students are being taught in makeshift mobile units adjacent to Osgood School, the damage to our community's image — and consequential negative economic impact upon our property values — will be long-lasting. This is not a scare tactic (as the opponents like to say). It is something I have experienced firsthand. And with a large kindergarten enrollment for this coming year, it will happen in Cohasset.

Beyond the question of a new school itself, however, what has been most disheartening about the discussion of this issue is the vitriol with which the campaign against it is being waged. Whatever happened to the concept of "disagreeing without being disagreeable"? I fully appreciate the right of individuals to fight — and to fight hard — for a cause they believe in.

But obsessiveness, whether at an individual or collective level, never is healthy. At some point, there must be closure to an issue so the community can move on. While it is true that the group opposing the new school is within its rights to call for a Special Town Meeting, it is a perversion of the democratic process when that Special Town Meeting has been called in the face of a previously favorable vote by the majority of citizens on the issue.

The Special Town Meeting cannot overturn the Prop 2-1/2 override. So what will be accomplished if the opponents succeed? Nothing — other than the needless wasting of scarce town resources and creating further divisiveness — because even if the school opponents are successful with their article at the Special Town Meeting (which is being called at the height of vacation season), all of us can rest assured that within a very short time frame, proponents of a new school, such as myself, who constitute a majority of the citizens of the town as evidenced by our referendum vote, will call for another Special Town Meeting to rescind the vote of this Special Town Meeting.

(In addition, there is the threshold legal issue of whether the Aug. 10 Special Town Meeting can rescind the earlier Town Meeting vote, because the SJC wrote in the 1923 Townsend case that a Town Meeting may not rescind a prior Town Meeting vote if obligations have been incurred — and the town has already incurred hundreds of thousands of expenses for the new school).

We should not forget the Biblical admonition that "If a house is divided, that house cannot stand unto itself." I understand—without implying any criticism of their feelings—that many of the longtime residents of this town would just as soon not have to deal with an influx of new families with young children who are inflating the elementary-school population.

However, Cohasset is not alone in having to address the problems inherent in this demographic shift. But what will separate our community from the others is whether we deal with this reality based on the facts and what is best for our town as a whole — or whether we will allow ourselves to sink into the abyss of emotionalism and consume ourselves with negativity.

Why is town's tax rate higher?

To the Editor:

It would be fair to say that Cohasset, Dover and Manchester-by-the-Sea are three communities with a similiar "very special quality of life."

But the Cohasset tax rate is 27.3 percent higher than in Dover and Manchester. Why?

Town	1992 population	1996 total assessed valuation ($ millions)	1996 Tax rate per $1000 valuation	Moody's Debt Rating (Aa is better than A. Aaa is the highest rating.)	Debt capita (June/1995 dept/1994 population)
Cohasset	7,257	833	$14.50	A	$604
Dover	5,126	882	$11.35	Aa	$170
Mancester-by-the-Sea	5,410	782	$11.30	Aa	$635

School consensus must be reached

To the Editor:

Again, Cohasset is in a crisis situation regarding its proposed new school building. We have had two Town Meetings and two override votes, but the populace is still restless regarding the site chosen. The issue of whether the present Osgood School is adequate is clear — something must be done.

Although the School Facilities Committee has diligently spent many hours at meetings and other work/telephone sessions as discussed at their June 25 meeting, the dust has not settled, nor has it been concluded for at least half of the townspeople.

Now, a petition to rescind the vote and start over on the school project has been proposed. I support it, since the present plan cannot be changed for funding and is flawed, as critical town boards' input was lacking.

Two possible solutions stand out: rehab the Osgood School with land-taking to create area for expansion and fields; develop a new building near the Deer Hill in the flagpole area as a campus, sharing educational programs between the schools, Change the egress of the site from Sohier Street, which is dangerous, and add more fields. Enlarge the nature study area on the 70-plus-acre site.

Twenty-five years ago, when the 70-plus-acre school land was acquired, it was known the land was marginal due to perc test failures, and the site chosen for the school was in the Pleasant Lane area. That area was rejected by Town Meeting.

I urge all to attend Town Meeting to participate in this most important vote for your town and its children. It is important that we reach a consensus with this vote.

New school is right decision

To the Editor:

The year is 1996. Televisions, computers, and cars are here to stay. At least one of these or all of these are owned or used by you daily.

This year is 192., 75 years ago most families had none of these items. For the 75 years since then I do not know of anyone who has not acquired a television, telephone or a car. Personally the residents of Cohasset have not denied themselves the right and need to advance.

Yet the town has continually questioned the need for its schools to advance along with new technology.

The Osgood School has been left in the dust. The building is unsafe, inaccessible to handicapped students and unequipped to meet the educational needs of today and the future, to name but a few of its inadequacies.

We need a public school system and school that will prepare our children and then some to live, work and prosper in a technological world that is here to stay. The phrase "a little paint and paper will cover a multitude of sins" is uninformed and (grossly) untrue. We have an obligation to our children to best prepare them for the world they will face. To turn our backs with statements such as "It was good enough for me" or "My children did OK" is uncaring and unwilling to invest in our town and its future.

The Osgood School, however quaint, is good enough no longer. Unfortunately too many things have been good enough for too long and now we are faced with many expenses as a town. I am very sensitive to this but do not see what can be gained by putting this project off, jeopardizing state funding and putting or band-aid on the Osgood School to the tune of $3.9 million with no reimbursement. The new school will cost you $205 per year for four years, $3.90 per week, then drop off to $95 a year thereafter or $1.80 per week. Let's back Cohasset's beauty and reputation by a school and a school system to be proud of — a system and facilities that will prepare our children to compete and prosper in the 21st century. A system and facilities that will increase your property values and retain your home as a sound investment. Don't let Cohasset rest on its laurels any longer. The town's reputation, value and future is at stake. Please vote no against reconsideration.

Advisers won't back school articles

Say project should go forward

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

The $9.9 million new school project has received a boost.

On Tuesday, the advisory board voted to not recommend either the article that calls for the halt of the project, or the article that seeks to move the school.

Board members delayed their decision on the sewer article until Monday, when they would have more information.

Board member Leland Jenkins cast the sole dissenting vote against not recommending the halt of school project.

The board was unanimously in favor of not recommending the article that calls for the school to be moved closer to Deer Hill School.

Roger Whitley, as chairman, does not vote unless there is a tie.

"When I cast a ballot, I will be not in favor," he said.

The two articles, articles 1 and 6, were driven by petitions circulated by citizens. The special town meeting, which will be held Monday, Aug. 12, at 7:30 p.m., was initiated by the proponents of Article 1, which seeks to halt the school project.

The town meeting has six articles on the warrant.

Jenkins' contention was that the issues that arose with the new school project should have been sorted out before the March town meeting.

He also believed that the site had not been studied in depth, and other sites should have been more thoroughly researched.

Jenkins added that all advisory board members should see the site, which he stresses is all wetlands, before they make their decision.

Whitley disagreed.

"Why don't we leave it to the professionals? That is why we appoint a committee," he said, speaking of the School Facilities Committee, which was appointed to oversee the new school project.

Members agreed that the expertise of other town boards should have been utilized earlier, and the process could have run smoother.

Several added that the concerns were being addressed now, and the project was not called into question.

Board Member Ken Ingber was initially leery of supporting the project.

"I now feel better," he said. "If there is a killer criticism, I am not hearing it at this point."

Member Dick Avery agreed.

He said that the concerns of the opponents were listened to, and some addressed, but "on balance" they weren't monumental concerns.

At the July 17 meeting of the school facilities committee, several advisory board members aired concerns and asked questions. The majority of them were answered, other answers are forthcoming.

Rick Flynn said that the project was even more worthwhile with the recent news of Cohasset's favorable placement on the state list for reimbursement.

The school project is earmarked for 60 percent reimbursement by the state.

Member Dan Evans said that the advisory board should be advocates of the new school, and correctly frame the issues.

The article seeking to move the school received little discussion.

Several members said that the new site would put the school on top of the flagpole in front of Deer Hill, and would be too close to the neighbors on Sohier Street.

The members of the advisory board held off making recommendations on the Article 2 and 3 until Monday, when they expect to have further information. The board scheduled a meeting before the special town meeting.

Article 2 deals with borrowing approximately $6 million for sewer construction in the Straits Pond/ Hull Street area; it also sets the stage for a Proposition 2 1/2 override which calls for the town to pay for half of the project.

Sewer Commission Ted Guild said this article is identical to the one that appeared before the town in March; however, a subsequent override did not pass.

"It gives the North Cohasset people another bite of the apple on the Proposition 2 1/2 override," he said.

If it passes, an override election would have to be scheduled in 45 days.

Before they made a recommendation, advisory committee members want assurances from town counsel that if the article passed, it wouldn't throw the sewer project off track.

Guild said proponents are looking for assurances from the town that they will be treated equitably.

Board members also requested further information on Article 3, which, if passed, would allow the town to make $500,000 in subsidized loans available at below market rates for residents who need to repair or improve septic systems.

Under the plan, the state would lend the money at half the market rate. Board members wanted to know if more, or less, than $500,000 could be borrowed as needed.

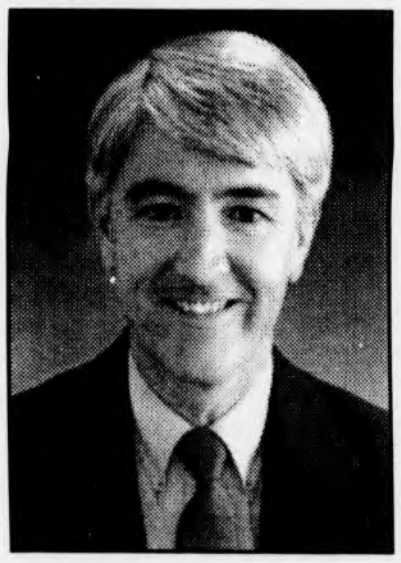
Members recommended Article 4 which appropriates $2,000 to help cover the cost of town meeting. Whitley said that the cost would more than likely exceed that amount.

The board also voted to approve Town Accountant Mike Buckley's recommendation that town meeting appropriate $25,900 to fund the Konohasset Clerical Association contract. Buckley added that the state aid the town received exceeded his estimates, and could be used to fund the agreement between the board of selectmen and the association.

In other business, the advisory board reelected chairman Whitley, elected Avery clerk and Ingber vice- chairman.

Ed Teague's Eye on Congress Fighting Crime

HYANNIS Ma -- Last week the Massachusetts Legislature passed a Sex Offender Law which requires convicted sex offenders to register with local authorities. The leader of the effort to pass the new bill was State Representative and Congressional Candidate Ed Teague (R-Yarmouth). "I'm obviously very proud to have been the sponsor of this bold new initiative," Teague said. "Now parents can feel a bit safer in their own neighborhoods."



Congressional Candidate Ed Teague

Passage of the Sex Offender Law through the State House has taken much of Ed Teague's time in recent weeks, but it is not the only anti-crime initiative Teague has proposed. In his campaign for the U.S. Congress, one of the questions he is most frequently asked is: How does he plan to confront the growing problem of crime? His answers are contained in Ed Teague's Ten Point Plan for the Cape and South Shore.

Although there are no easy answers to the complex challenge of fighting crime, Teague has addressed the crime problem at several levels. In developing his plan, Teague looked into the causes of crime, ways to deter potential criminals and punishing criminals when crimes are committed.

Teague's vision is to return to a time when neighbors left their front doors open without fear. With that clear goal in mind, he crafted an anti-crime package which combines the reduction of furloughs and paroles, inmate work requirements, restitution of victims, deportation of alien criminals, and, when warranted, the death penalty.

"Unfortunately, criminals aren't deterred from committing crimes because local police often don't get the tools they need to fight crimes," Teague said. "To make matters worse, criminals aren't locked up when they are caught and the few we are locking up are allowed to relax in luxury while they plan their next crime."

"It's a broken system that sends one clear message to criminals: Crime Pays," Teague continued. "Until we are willing to lock up those who are holding our neighborhoods hostage, we will have the same violent criminals committing the same crimes over and over again."

Fair solution to sewering costs sought

To Cohasset citizens:

First, thank you for your overwhelming support for a fair approach to costs for sewering. On March 30, you supported an amended Article 4 calling for a 50/50 sharing of costs by the Town and those to be sewered in the Straits Pond/Hull Street area subject to a Proposition 2-1/2 override. Unfortunately, the override failed narrowly by a swing vote of only 34 votes. More voters needed to understand the need for a "Yes" vote for this phase of the sewering so that the same program would be available for Central/Hillside and non-sewered on-site repairs.

We have not been idle since that override failed. We heard your concerns regarding on-site repairs not being able to enjoy the same plan. We sought, and indeed received, full support of the Selectmen and Sewer Commissioners to ask voters at the fall town meeting to support a 50/50 sharing of costs for the Straits Pond/Hull Street area, Central/Hillside and for on-site repairs subject to a Prop 2-1/2 override. We believe there were honorable attempts to do this, but, unfortunately, Central/Hillside cannot be presented for consideration until our annual spring meeting.

We honestly do not want to delay the North Cohasset sewer project. We have received verbal assurances that Selectmen and Sewer Commissioners will support a 50/50 cost sharing plan in the future. But Boards do come and go. We asked that a Motion be presented Aug. 12 with the support of all boards and you, the residents and voters, once again to say through your vote on that motion that 50/50 is the only fair way in these times.

DID YOU KNOW:

1. All Cohasset taxpayers paid 100 percent of the costs for our current treatment plant's construction? There was no betterment charge assessed against these early sewered residences.

2. Operation and maintenance costs through 1996 to date have totaled $2,818,297 and only $749,441 was collected from the users, leaving more than two million dollars paid out of general revenues? This amount is in addition to the construction costs paid out of general revenues.

We seek a fairer distribution of costs!

3. We never asked that North Cohasset go first — we didn't even know certain areas were ever to be sewered. The decision was powered in part by the necessity to clean up Straits Pond and the pleas by Hull for Cohasset to act.

We need a townwide cohesive policy: 50/50 cost-sharing of construction costs and 100 percent of operation and maintenance costs to be borne by the users.

Please come to the Special Town Meeting Monday, Aug. 12, at the Music Circus Tent, 7:30 p.m. Let us speak with one voice — let us commit our sewering future to a fair, reasonable and equitable plan.

Diane C. Sullivan, for our group

Support for sewer, school urged

To the Editor:

When we decided to live in Cohasset, we were drawn by the quaint village and beautiful common. But a town is more than cute buildings, ponds and pretty lawns...most of all it is the people. And the many family events on the common, the active Council for the Aging, and strong Historical Society reflected the values and commitment to community with which we wanted to raise our children.

During the past year we have been saddened to see the community divided over support for a new school and sewer project. Commitment to education and the environment is at the heart of the legacy a community leaves to its children. The new school and the sewer are both projects long overdue, and that we can no longer afford to put off.

One of the responsibilities of living in a community, is participating in its town meetings. We urge you to attend the Special Town Meeting Monday, Aug. 12. We urge you to support both education and the environment.

Coalition wants selectmen to nix Greenbush train

Dear Cohasset Selectmen,

June 17, several members of the Coastal Coalition of Cohasset made a presentation regarding the proposed Greenbush train. We updated you on Greenbush issues and requested that you consider three responses:

1. Reread the draft EIR available at the library.

2. Write a letter to the Inspector General of Mass. asking him to look into the wasteful spending by the MBTA on the Greenbush project, and,

3. Cosign a letter to Gov. Weld asking him to reconsider his decision.

I followed this up with a letter (June 18) reviewing our requests and provided some additional information for your review. In this letter I indicated that we would be awaiting a response within the next few weeks.

Since this time, I have made several calls to Mr. Doyan in an attempt to find out what the selectmen decided in response to our requests. It has been almost tow months and we have yet to hear from any one of you. To say that I am disappointed in the lack of any response to our requests is putting it mildly. I understand there are many older important issues on the table that are demanding your attention and I also understand that it is summer. However, the issue of the reconstruction of Greenbush is also a critical issue and requires the attention of you, our elected officials. Remember that at least 50 percent of the town voted against it! This proposed train will affect every fiber of our town and its citizens and ultimately all its relevant issues will fall upon your shoulders. Please consider our requests and advise us of the course of action you have chosen.

Ed's note: This letter was sent to selectmen.

There will be a reception at 7 p.m. at "The Ridges," home of Polly Logan, 121 Nichols Road, Cohasset, followed by the concert at the South Shore Music Circus, chairman Polly Logan announced.

Friends may attend the reception or concert only or may wish to attend both the concert and the reception Logan added. Sen. Hedlund will mix and mingle at the tent party and at intermission at the South Shore Music Circus with guest Harry Belafonte.

Belafonte world-wide concert tours have repeatedly sold out since 1956 and at the Music Circus he gives audiences a mix of traditional material like "Day O" (The Banana Boat Song), and "Island in the Sun" as well as new and redefined pieces.

Sen. Hedlund has effectively represented the towns of Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset, Hull, Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury, and South Braintree, Logan said.

Benefit information may be obtained from Polly Logan, 383-0031; Linda Glennon, 337-4138; Ann Collins, 749-0817; Carl Harris, 749-7715; Joan Francis, 545-1361 and Audrey MacDonald, 934-0366.

Johnston to host health care forum

Phil Johnston, Democratic candidate for the 10th Congressional District, will host the first in a series of district-wide health care forums Thursday, Aug. 8, at 7:30 p.m. at the Hingham Community Center, 70 South St. in Hingham.

Johnston is the former New England director of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. He resigned his presidential appointment to launch his congressional campaign.

The health forum speakers will include Dr. Turner Bledsoe of Hingham, regional medical director of Blue Cross/Blue Shield, and Dr. Judith Palfrey, director of general pediatrics at Children's Hospital in Boston.

Johnston has proposed a Congressional Health Consumers' Bill of Rights which would protect health care for all citizens. "The number one issue for the working, middle class families in this district and throughout the country, is health care. It is outrageous that today in this state alone, there are 700,000 people without health insurance coverage. I strongly believe that all citizens are entitled to high quality, affordable health care," Johnston said.

Managed health care, he said, must attend to the needs of the consumer, where medical decisions are not made on the basis of financial greed, but rather on what is best for the patient.

Following statements by the panel members, there will be questions from the audience.

The public is invited to attend. For more information about the health care forum, call (617) 837-8896.

Guarding the nest egg

Can baby boomers keep their 401(k)s safe?

By Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

More than ever, the safety of your 401(k) is in your own hands — but a recent court case may shift the onus to employers.

Is your 401(k) money safe? That's the question for the nation's 22 million 401(k) investors — most of them baby boomers — who depend on the $553 billion in their accounts to see them through their elder-boomer years. Given the electoral clout of this group, it's not surprising that First Boomer Bill Clinton recently proposed legislation intended to alleviate boomer worries about retirement.

Behind this concern lurks a harsh reality: As corporate paternalism wanes — 30,000 pension plans have vanished since 1990 — employers are increasingly shoving liability for the rising tide of 401(k) plans onto workers.

So far, no 401(k)s have tanked. However, the Department of Labor, which regulates the nation's 140,000 401(k) plans, recently proposed new rules that would give greater protection to 401(k) plan managers. At the same time, benefits experts at some of the Big Six accounting firms now say that some plan managers don't apply the same tough fiduciary oversight to 401(k)s that they apply to pensions. That could prove important: Elderboomers stuck with lousy plan choices now could face a dangerously reduced standard of living in retirement, with little recourse to make up the difference. Labor will not bail out plans that go belly up, the way the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. saves pensions. Also, it's generally illegal for companies to lend money to their 401(k)s in the event of a loss.

There's a simple monetary reality behind the problems with 401(k) plan oversight: Corporate executives spend hours on end keeping vigil over their pension plan investments because they're funding these plans with the company's dough. Employees fund their 401(k)s largely with their own money.

A recent class action lawsuit filed by the employees of Unisys Corp., a Pennsylvania computer maker, illuminates the problem. Benefits experts agree that the Unisys case is a portrait in miniature of what's wrong with the management of 401(k)s today.

Last January, a federal appeals court in Philadelphia ruled in favor of employees who are suing Unisys over $100 million in 401(k) losses stemming from an Executive Life guaranteed investment contract offered in the company's 401(k) plan. The case still has to return to district court for a final decision, but the appeals decision could set a precedent on behalf of investors.

Unisys got its investments from Executive Life Insurance of California, which went bust in 1991 because of heavy junk-bond losses. The employees successfully argued in appeals court that Unisys had breached its fiduciary duties of prudence and due diligence by not sufficiently warning them about the riskiness of the investments or about Executive Life's horrid financial situation. For example, employees showed that management's due diligence consisted largely of looking at Executive Life's good credit ratings.

In its defense, Unisys argued that it was protected by law because its employees controlled their 401(k) assets. The court agreed that Unisys had protection under the law, but also concluded that it may have violated its fiduciary duties of prudence and remanded the case back to district court for trial.

The Labor Department recently proposed new rules to clarify the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, which outlines a company's fiduciary responsibility in administering 401(k) plans. An employer who follows the rules (they're optional) is more likely to offer a solid plan. On the other hand, by following the rules, an employer protects itself against lawsuits and complaints, even if the employer put poor investment choices into a 401(k) plan.

The crucial part determines when information becomes advice. Giving investment advice makes an employer potentially liable for the performance of investments. If the employer stays on the information side of the line, you are legally and squarely in control of your 401(k).

Rep. Ed Teague apologizes for absentee vote

Sargent calls for his resignation as minority leader

By SUSANNA GRAHAM-PYE
Cohasset Mariner

Statehouse Speaker Thomas Finneran "reminded" legislators they are not allowed to record votes for one another after it was discovered that Rep. Ed Teague, R-Yarmouth, had a colleague cast his vote while he was out campaigning for Congress.

Bill Sargent, independent Republican candidate for the 10th Congressional District, called for Teague's resignation as House Minority Leader last week.

"Since, by his actions, Teague has put his Congressional campaign before his duties to the electorate, he should resign as minority leader," Sargent said. "The position of voters' trust should not be entrusted to others. Such maneuvering is irresponsible and unethical."

The discovery came during a recent vote on the Rivers Protection Bill. Rep. Jacqueline Lewis, R-Bridgewater, was seen pushing the voting button at Teague's desk while he was in Hull at a cable television interview, campaigning for the U.S. 10th Congressional District seat.

Teague had left the Statehouse nearly an hour before Rep. Lewis voted for him.

"It was a mistake," Teague said. "My error was in not telling Rep. Lewis that I'd left the building."

While Teague said he had never before actually left the building and let a colleague vote for him, state Rep. Christopher Hodgkins, D-Lee, said several weeks ago he saw Teague getting into his car. There was a vote shortly after that and Teague's light went on. He said he saw someone else voting for Teague several times after that and he spoke to the representative about it.

Finneran said only court officers, not legislators, may vote for an absent legislator, and only when he or she is "suffering from some form of physical incapacity."

But Teague said it is "a courtesy, for lack of a better term," for leadership members to have peers vote for them. That usually happens, however, only when the representative is still in the building.

"I looked at the clock, and saw all of a sudden it was approaching seven," he said. "I rushed out of the building and didn't call Jacqui (Lewis). That was a mistake."

After his error was pointed out to him by a reporter, he requested that the House clerk remove his vote from the record, Teague said.

"It was a poor choice. I just hustled out of the building," he said. He emphasized that Lewis was part of the day's discussions surrounding the bill and knew where he stood.

The Rivers Protection Bill was aimed at inserting greater protection for rivers into the Wetlands Protection Act. Teague said he was involved with last-minute discussions surrounding an amendment for an exemption of a hazardous waste cleanup site in Pittsfield. Teague said he opposed that amendment.

Teague's opponents in the congressional race wasted no time in seizing the opportunity to criticize the act and his record on environmental issues.

Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt was the first to zero in on the action after the news broke.

He fired off press releases that called Teague "missing in action in crucial environmental fight."

"....Ed Teague not only violated the voters' trust when he attempted to deceive them, by having another Republican cast his votes," Delahunt said, "but he further violated that trust by missing the debate and votes on many important amendments to the Rivers Bill as well."

In response, Teague said he'd looked "very carefully at the bill" and that his discussions on the rivers bill had been the thing that pulled his attention from the clock that day and got him rushing to his next appointment.

"My voting record is 99 percent, or thereabouts, since I've come to the legislature," he said. "There really shouldn't be much of a question about my commitment to that. On the matter of the bill, it passed by a very large majority and by no means was my vote crucial."

Teague said he thought it unlikely that the legislative voting practices will change after the attention given to the events.

"Let's put it this way. Since I've been here, this courtesy has been extended to those in leadership positions," he said. "The speaker, ways and means chairman, members who are signed to conference committees — they have a raft of other matters that will take them off the floor."

But Sargent said it was a serious matter.

"It's basically a character issue," he said. "He wants people to think that what he did was a mere bending of the rules, when he was actually breaking them. I don't want this wink-and-nod system to be taken to the U.S. Congress. It's certainly something Studds never did."

Junior championships ready to set sail

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The world isn't coming to Cohasset, but it will be playing host to an athletic competition perfect for a community whose summer activities revolve around the ocean.

The largest general junior regatta in Mass Bay will descend on Cohasset for what promises to be three days of stiff competition.

A cast of 300 sailors 250 boats and countless volunteers will be out in full force for the Mass Bay Sailing 1996 BayBank Junior Championships from Aug. 13-15.

The event, which will be held just beyond the breakwater leading into Cohasset Harbor, is being co-sponsored by the Cohasset Yacht Club and Sailing Club. A regatta committee, co-chaired by Sam Wakeman and Chuck Peterson, has been meeting regularly since the competition was approved for Cohasset early last summer.

"It's down to crunch time and it's getting very busy," said Peterson. "It's going to be a lot of fun. Of course, we're hoping the weather cooperates."

Ranging in age from 8 to 18, the three-day competition has a slew of different categories based on the style of boat and experience of those sailing. The class events include Optimist red, white, green, blue and fleet, Duplin red, white and fleet, Turnabout red, Laser Radials, Turnabouts and Club 420's.

The racers will head outside the harbor where they'll be directed to one of four areas, independent of the other, Peterson said. Races will run from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. over the first two days of competition and 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. on the third.

Peterson said the tourney's goal is for each fleet to get in 10 races. The routes are approximately 2-1/2 miles.

The influx of boats will be stored in the Parker Ave. parking lot, at both clubs and on moorings scattered throughout the harbor. Several local boaters have donated their own moorings to be used for the three days.

A total of 150 volunteers from Cohasset and other surrounding towns will house many of the sailors from the North Shore who are competing in the event.

The competition aspect of the sailing championships is just part of the itinerary planned for the sailors. A pizza party is scheduled, along with a cookout and awards ceremony following the final day of competition. A dinner dance has also been planned, as well as a cocktail party on Aug. 13 at Bancroft Hall for the adults.

Hitting the mats

Wrestling club welcoming new grapplers

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Wrestlers from the South Shore who are trying to keep their edge during the lean summer months now have an up-and-coming club to turn to.

The Orange Crush Wrestling Club, the brainchild of Weymouth High assistant wrestling coach Mike Kenney, has been working out and competing through the summer in weekend tournaments.

But most importantly, the club has a coach who wants to see the wrestlers improve, have success on the mats, and all the while have fun doing it.

Kenney, 25, moved to Weymouth from Pittsburgh

Cohasset has been the one swamping the competition this summer in the South Shore Swim League, capturing the league title and an undefeated season with its win over Scituate. See results on pg. 18.

John Tesh and those crazy Olympics

They'll most likely be remembered as "The Good, The Bad and The Ugly Games." Atlanta turned out to be a fine host for the Centennial Olympics, but due to circumstances beyond the city's control there were controversies every time you turned the T.V. on.

There are some moments, for better or worse, that we'll never forget.

• I may be in the minority about this, but, as courageous as she was, I believe American gymnast Kerri Strug was terrified with the thought of facing Bela Karolyi if she didn't attempt her second vault in the team competition. All through the gymnastics competition the girls looked as though they were completely miserable. There was no joy in their eyes and they didn't look to be that close of a team. We only see the camera-hound Karolyi in the spotlight. It'd be interesting to see how he interacts with his gymnasts behind the scenes.

• The thought that Carl Lewis is a great tool for the advancement of track & field in the United States is a farce. In interviews leading up to the long jump Lewis spoke out to the American public just how much he has matured since winning his first gold medals at Los Angeles in 1984.

But, alas, Lewis' true colors finally came through in the end when he lobbied furiously to get himself onto the 400-meter relay team in an attempt to win a 10th gold medal. Forget the fact that he finished deal last in the 100 meters at the Olympic trials.

Reardon

• I'm confused as to how many "Dream Teams" there actually are. Was it the men's or women's basketball teams or the women's softball squad? All three won gold medals and were referred to as the "Dream Team." Hopefully former UMASS-Amherst coach John Calipari will buy the rights to the expression and we'll never have to hear it again, except from "Coach Cal's" lips.

• You have to love the way Irish swimmer Michelle Smith was treated by the press, fellow swimmers and spectators. It just goes to show an athlete can't put together some incredible performances without being subject to suspicion. Just like every other medal winner, Smith was tested for illegal stimulants and the results came up negative. But unlike the other medalists she was retested further.

And shame on American swimmer Janet Evans for adding fuel to the fire

New wrestling club welcomes South Shore grapplers almost two years ago where he coached high school wrestling while attending Clemson University. Kenney also wrestled on the Clemson squad, whose nickname was Orange Crush.

Kenney's goal in forming the club is to get across to his wrestlers the importance of year-round training in order to reach goals and move to the next level.

"To be special you have to put in that extra work in the summer," Kenney said. "I just want to show the kids what wrestling is all about."

The team, which is made up of wrestlers between 14 years old to college age, trains on Tuesday and Thursday nights at either Brockton or Hingham High. A typical training session begins with 15 minutes of conditioning warmups. Then it's on to 30 minutes of drill moves.

After the drills, it's time for live wrestling.

"Then we go to battle for an hour," Kenney said with a laugh. "They really love it."

Kenney closes out the workouts with 30 to 45 minutes of lifting.

As hard as the wrestlers work, Kenney makes the training fun and is sure the grapplers leave a session wanting to come back to the next one.

"It's not a hell-beating thing," he said. "We take our breaks, laugh and have a good time.

Kenney is assisted by 22-year-old Eric Burns. Like Kenney, Burns is also a coach at Weymouth High and a definite asset to the Orange Crush program.

"He has been a great help this season and is a great wrestler himself," Kenney said. "He's a great guy and the kids really respect him."

He also has Weymouth's co-head coaches Gerry and Kevin Mackin to thank for their support.

"I owe a lot to them," Kenney said. "They brought me on their team and let me run with the Orange Crush. They helped me out a lot."

Kenney's crew, which won the Massachusetts Club Championship this summer, has a select group of wrestlers who trained in the summer before the Orange Crush was formed. Now the wrestlers have the opportunity to work out together.

Rockland's Mark Laramee, the defending state champion in his weight class, used to train in Brockton during the summer, but the calibre of wrestlers wasn't close to what the Orange Crush squad offers.

"Before I joined the club I wasn't wrestling as much," said Laramee, a gold medalist at the Bay State Games. "We have a lot of fun during the practices and learn a lot. Mike has been teaching me a lot of freestyle and get to go to more tournaments.

"I'll do this through my senior year."

The club includes a strong contingent of wrestlers, particularly from Weymouth with New England champion Joe Curran, P.J. Silva, Dave Sheridan and Kevin O'Meara.

Curran had a sensational winter season, becoming the first New England champion ever to come out of Weymouth High.

For Kenney, Curran's achievement was very satisfying.

"To see him on the (victory) stand and knowing the hard work he put into it was great," he said.

Silva, who'll enter his sophomore year this fall, said he has seen a vast improvement in his own skills and is already looking to the winter season.

"It's helped me out in every way possible," Silva said. "I've been able to go to different states and see wrestlers from around the country. It shows you just what you have to do to improve.

"Since the (winter) season I feel twice as good. I've been able to wrestle with Mark Laramee and Dave Swanson (of Hingham). I've wrestled more times this summer than I did during the high school season."

Kenney tapes each wrestler's matches and then goes over what he did well and where mistakes were made. The wrestlers then work on improving the areas that weren't as strong as they could be.

Silva said Kenney is responsible for his improvement.

"Mike Kenney has helped me so much," he said. "He tells me what I'm doing right and where I'm making my mistakes."

Hanover's Scott Wuori is one of the elite wrestlers on the club and a training partner of Laramee's. Cohasset's Matt Duffy and Brian Harding of Marshfield both have had strong summers to go along with their superb high school showings over the winter.

Some of the other members include Peter Youssef, David Swanson and Max Belushho of Hingham and Hanover's Stephen Doyle.

Not only do the club members train together but they also compete in tournaments on weekends. The grapplers have wrestled in more than 18 tournaments, traveling to the New England states, New York and Pennsylvania.

Kenney said it was a tournament in Bloomsburgh, PA. which really showed the wrestlers just how much competition is out there.

"That really opened their eyes to what wrestling's all about," he said.

A seven-day camp at East Stroutsburgh University really brought out the club's true colors and showed just how much they want to improve.

"It was an intensive wrestling camp," Kenney said. "Since then I've seen a 100-percent turnaround in the kids' attitude.

"You have to hand it to the kids. They're young and ambitious and really excited about wrestling."

The club currently has 38 members, but Kenney is hoping to increase that amount next summer to 50 to 60 wrestlers. The response has been positive and he is confident Orange Crush will expand in 1997.

"People have been calling off the hook," Kenney said. "Since the Bay State Games everybody wants to get involved."

And the club isn't restricted solely to elite wrestlers. Kenney says wrestlers of all abilities are welcome to join.

"Anybody who wants to come and learn," Kenney answered when asked what the criteria for members is. "It's fun and it's only six hours a week. The more the merrier.

"I just want our names to get out that the Orange Crush is coming. We're here to wrestle."

For Kenney, the most satisfying aspect of coaching the club is watching the kids excel and the excitement they exhibit as they continue to improve.

"It's great to see a kid come back and avenge a loss," he said.

The boys in orange are strong now and are only going to get stronger.

John Tesh and those crazy Olympics

regarding Smith's performances by saying there were whispers around the pool venue that she, indeed, was on steroids. It was Smith, however, who got the last laugh in the end, along with three gold medals.

• Michael Johnson's fabulous double in the 400 and 200 sprints was amazing and his humbleness in victory was inspiring. The same goes for Jackie Joyner-Kersee's painful long jump attempt which garnered her a bronze medal on her final try.

• As boring as John Tesh was to listen to during the gymnastics events, former Olympian Tim Daggett was twice as grating. You can bet those two won't be paired together in Sydney, four years from now.

• Ballroom Dancing as an exhibition event? I never knew it was considered a sport.

• I was surprised at just how much I enjoyed watching the kayak events. Ditto for volleyball.

• Now that beach volleyball is an event, surfing is just around the corner. But I'm drawing the line at ballroom dancing as an exhibition event.

• By the way, here are my votes for bowling, golf and aerobic competitions to be part of the Sydney Games.

• As sad as it is, I wasn't all that surprised by the bomb in Centennial Village. I'm surprised that a security guard is looking more and more to be responsible.

• There have been nothing but complaints about NBC's Olympic coverage, but let's face it, there are some events everybody wants to see. Events some people want to see and events nobody even knew were part of the Olympics, badminton for example.

• While we're on the subject, put me on the list of those who actually enjoyed watching the limited badminton coverage. It's far different than the backyard cookout variety we've become accustomed to.

• Bill Walton's comparison between the Dream Team's passion for the game and former Grateful Dead's Jerry Garcia's love of playing the guitar was puzzling until you realize Walton has always been a huge Dead fan.

• Hats off to the Olympic Committee for changing the men's marathon starting time from 6:30 p.m. to 7 a.m. The race was tough enough for the marathoners, but the conditions would have been unbearable had it been held in the evening.

• On 3, let's all give a group yawn dedicated to the equestrian competition. 1...2...

• Solo synchronized swimming. Now there's an event you only have yourself to blame if you screw up.

See you in Sydney!

Cohasset businessmen contribute to bike patrol

These two-wheel drive police vehicles can go just about anywhere. They have 21 speeds, special tires and for fuel they rely solely on the energy of the rider. And they cost about $25,000 less than a state-of-the-art cruiser.

Dollar-for-dollar, the Cohasset Police Department's specially equipped bike patrol, established last month, is one of the most efficient programs in the department.

"We believe the bike program is an essential part of public safety and police visibility," said Chief Brian Noonan. "These vehicles have quick access to areas police cruisers cannot reach. They patrol the shoreline, parks, parking areas and narrow side roads. And they have an element of surprise in protecting the public: you can't hear them. They can race to a crime scene without anyone being aware of it."

The bike patrol, he said, also helps to keep the summer flow of young people moving in an orderly fashion at night in the village center.

While Chief Noonan is sold on his bike program, additional public contributions are needed to help sustain it. To date, the program has been funded, for the most part, with donations, the most recent from Bob Gaughen, president and CEO of the Hingham Institution for Savings, and Donald Staszko, a member of the bank's board of directors. Both live in Cohasset and have actively contributed to community projects. Gaughen's and Staszko's contributions, totaling $500, were presented to Chief Noonan last week outside the Cohasset branch of Hingham Institution for Savings. They will be used to purchase necessary equipment for the patrol, the chief said.

At present, the bike patrol consists of four mountain bikes, two Raleighs and one Trek. The "black and whites" (black bikes with white police lettering) are ridden by specially trained police officers, and are equipped with public safety and first aid gear.

To date, the Cohasset Police Association and the Masonic Lodge have donated bikes to the program.

"I am deeply grateful when various associations, banks like Hingham Institution for Savings and individuals like Mr. Staszko come forward with contributions," Noonan said. "In difficult budget times, we rely on these donations to keep our service to the public at the highest possible level."

Hingham Institution for Savings President and CEO Robert Gaughen, Police Chief Brian Noonan, Officer Chris Tarantino, and Donald Staszko, a member of the bank's board of directors, pose outside the bank with one of the department's new police bicycles.

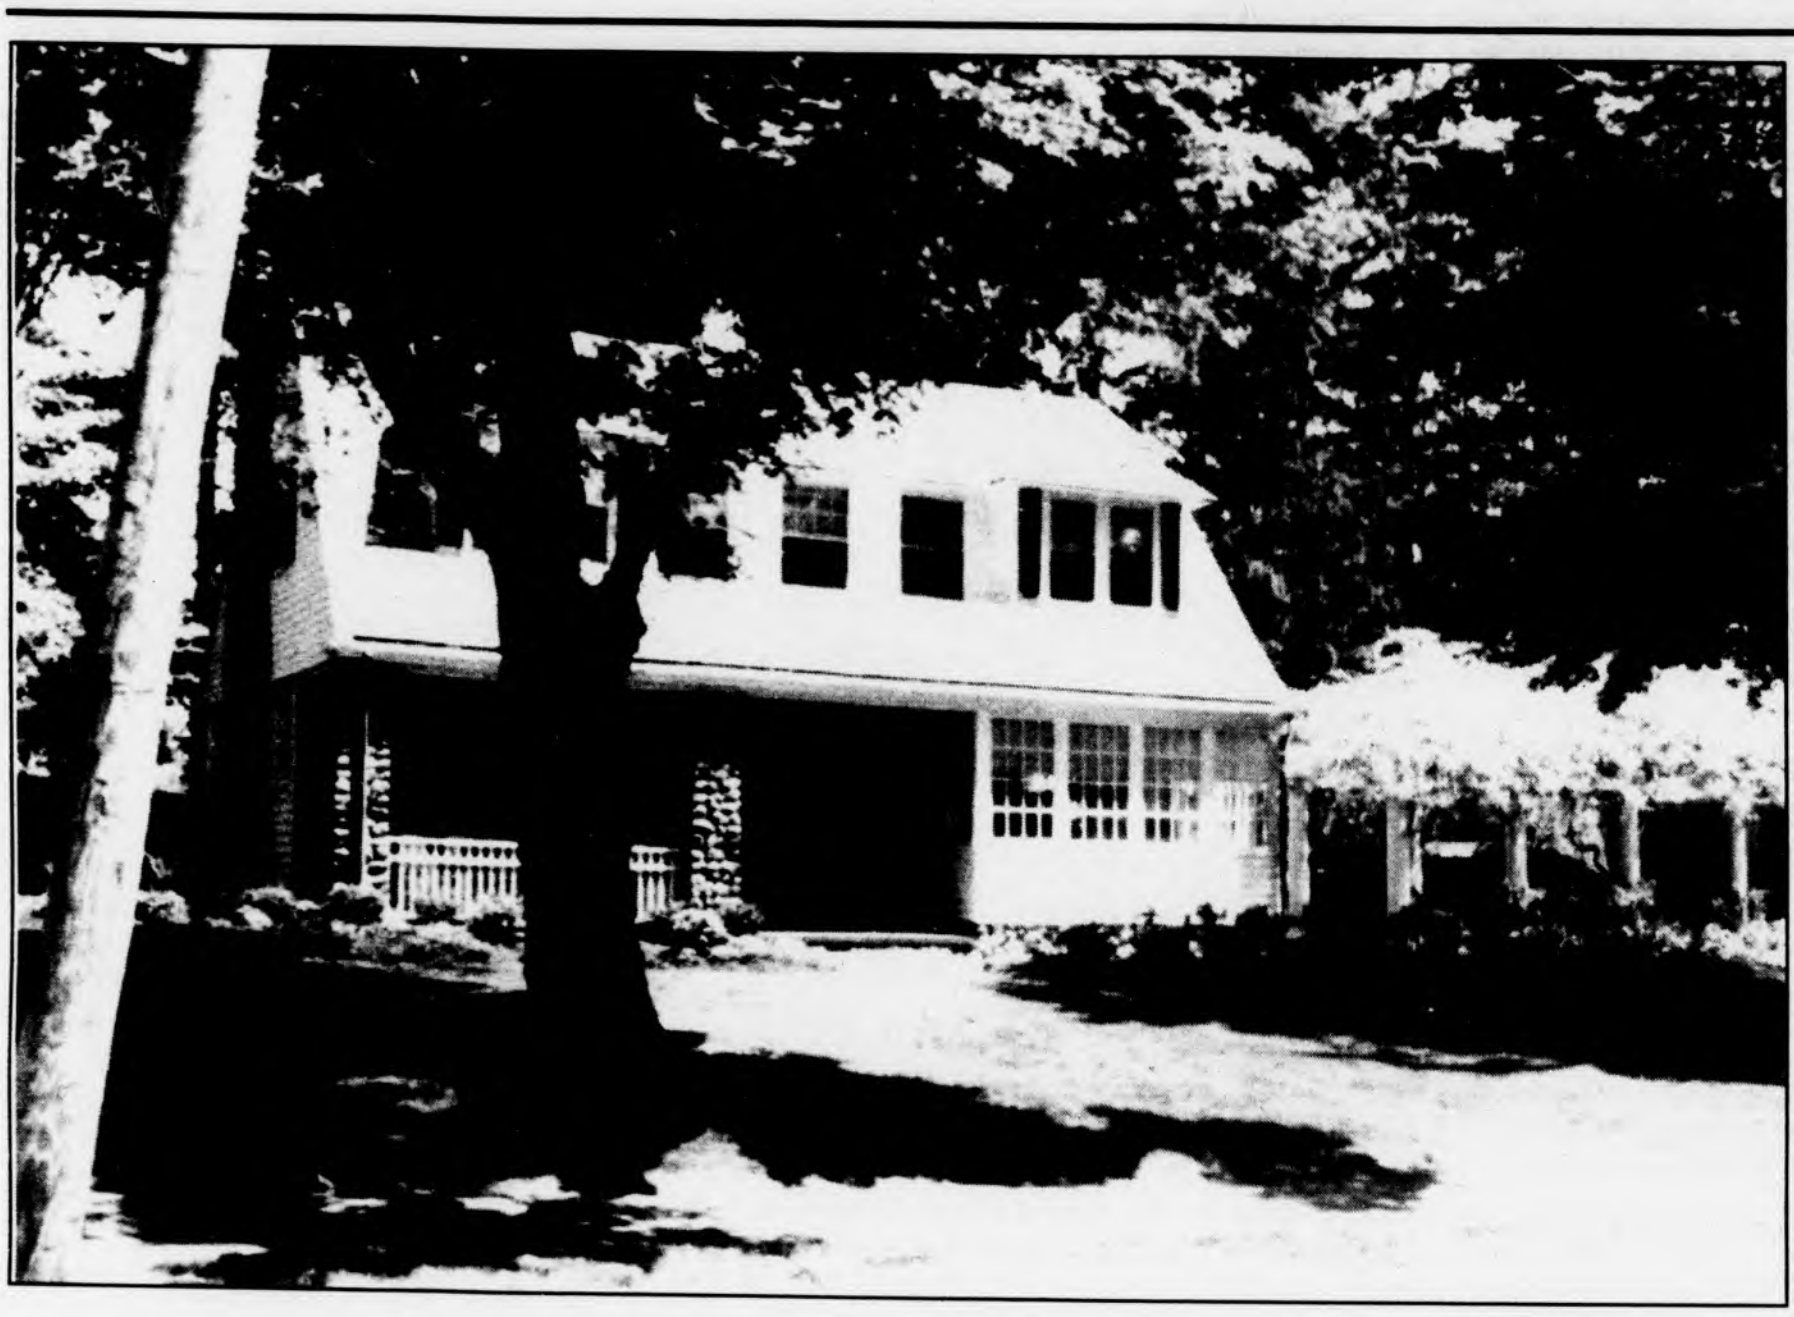
The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863



This lovely bungalow-style home at 6 Ripley Road has one of the most beautiful pergolas in town. In spring, it is covered with blooms of purple wisteria. The owners have recently planted a beautiful perennial bed filled with summertime color. Tall, stately purple Allium Giganteus or giant onion was one of the first to appear in the spring. Now, the garden is filled with blue-lace-cap hydrangea, pink hollyhock, the gray leaves of snow-in-summer and the mahogany-colored leaves of coral bells. (Correction: the lovely garden, I featured in the July 18 Grand Tour belongs to Sally and Dick Avery of Surry Drive. I inadvertently had Sally's name wrong in the article! I apologize for the error and wish to thank both Sally and Dick for inviting me to photograph their beautiful home and gardens).

New web site may attract book lovers

Local woman launches new venture

By SUSAN HAGSTROM
Cohasset Mariner

There's nothing better than sitting under an umbrella at the beach and cracking open a new book. Until of course, you realize the book is a wash out.

Hingham resident Joan Call has developed a service that will take some of the guess work out of book buying and it can now be accessed on the World Wide Web at www.independentreader.com.

Beginning this month, 13 diverse and independent bookstores from across the country will reveal their favorite books in Call's new Internet publication, "The Independent Reader." Call first discovered the need for such a publication while selling books at her former shop, the Little Harbor Bookstore in Cohasset.

"As the owner of a bookstore, I was surprised at how many people came in and asked for book recommendations," Call said. "Some people come in and they don't want to spend a lot of time looking for a book and they depend a lot on reviews."

After first investigating the possibility of putting out a print publication, Call decided to take her service to the "net", which was less expensive and imposed no limits regarding the number of books to be reviewed. Call pays for the web site, or host account, each month but hopes to make money by selling advertising space to publishers.

Call said she carefully developed a list of booksellers to provide recommendations by compiling a list of the best bookstores in the country and then narrowing that list down to thirteen. Each store will recommend five books in various categories and because they receive no funds for their participation, readers can depend on unbiased book recommendations from the experts. Additional information will be provided by linked web resources, including book reviews, author biographies, book group discussion guides and more.

The participating bookstores are: A Clean Well-Lighted Place For Books, San Francisco, Ca., Bunch of Grapes, Vineyard Haven, Mass.; Cody's Books, Berkeley, Calif.; Elliott Bay Book Co., Seattle Wash.; The Harvard Bookstore, Cambridge, Mass.; The Hungry Mind, Saint Paul, Minn.; Partners & Crime, New York, N.Y., Powell's Books, Portland, Ore.; Prairie Lights, Iowa City, Iowa; Talking Leaves Books, Buffalo, N.Y.; Tattered Cover, Denver, Colo., That Bookstore in Blytheville, Blytheville, Ariz., and Women & Children First, Chicago, Ill..

"I had personal experiences with many of these booksellers," Call said. a bookseller, I was in awe of many of these stores because within my field, these are the best and the biggest; these are legends."

Each of the stores is featured on its own Independent Reader home page, which contains information about the store, its philosophy on bookselling, its five recommended books of the month and even a picture of the store.

"It's really nice for the reader. It's like taking a little trip to the store," Call said.

According to Call, accessing information on the web is very easy. She said that most new computers come with everything needed to connect to the web. Programs like "America On-Line" are often given away or can be purchased and installed on older computers.

"It's amazingly easy to use," Call said. "You don't need any computer skills to use the web. You just point and click."

Call anticipates that 20,000 people each month will view her publication. After having the web site up and running for just a short time, she has already received over 100 E-Mail correspondences from around the world.

In the future, Call has visions of expanding the project and maybe branching out into print but for now, she is focused on making "The Independent Reader" work for anyone who reads and is looking for a good book.

"I just want to be really good at this little piece and see where it goes."

Take a harbor cruise!

As part of St. Stephen's Church's centennial celebration, a moonlight harbor cruise, featuring nostalgic music, dining, dancing and fellowship, is planned.

The cruise ship "Massachusetts" departs from Hingham Shipyard Tuesday, Aug. 20, at 6:30 p.m.

For more details, call Martha Cook at 545-6947 or the parish office at 383-1083.

Keep-well clinics set for August

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League will sponsor two Keep Well Clinics in August. The clinics will take place Tuesday, Aug. 13, at 11 a.m. at South Shore Community Center, Senior Center Room, and Friday, Aug. 30, from 10 a.m. to noon, at Harborview, 60 Elm St.

Public health nurses will be available for blood pressure screenings and general health and nutrition consultations. The clinics are free for all Cohasset residents, regardless of age.

Cohasset Mariner

Vol. XVIII No. 38 | COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER COMPANY | August 15, 1996 | 1-800-649-6661 | 75 cents

Round two is Monday night

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Sandwiched between show nights featuring the brass-band "Tower of Power" and a jazz-event called a "Night in New Orleans" — Cohasset's planned new $9.9 million elementary school was the main attraction at the Music Circus, Monday.

After nearly an hour of spirited debate which followed 1-3/4 hours of formal presentations by proponents and opponents of the project, voters endorsed the school by nearly a 2-1 margin at the special town meeting, which at times was a loud and rowdy affair.

But the 885-448 vote margin rejecting a move to halt the project, may not be the end of it.

Meeting to reconvene on center stage

Roy Fitzsimmons, spokesman for the Concerned Cohasset Taxpayers, an anti-tax organization which led the effort to stop the school, said his group would support a motion to reconsider Article 1 at this Monday's continuation of the special town meeting getting underway at 7:30 p.m. at the Music Circus.

Notice was given for reconsideration before adjournment of Monday's session, which in more than five hours was only able to tackle one of the six articles on the warrant.

That means that if a majority of voters at the Aug. 19 continuation of the special town meeting agree to reconsider Monday's vote rejecting Article 1, debate on the school would be reopened, Town Moderator George Marlette explained.

Article 1 sought to rescind approval for the new school voted at the spring town meeting. That March 30 vote was followed by a favorable Prop.2-1/2 override on April 6 to raise taxes to pay for the project which will replace the existing Osgood School. The state will reimburse the town for 60% of the project costs and interest charges on

Sewer article to be decided

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Proponents of having the town split the cost of sewering the 345 homes in North Cohasset are as determined as ever to present their case to the special town meeting which reconvenes at the Music Circus, Aug. 19.

Last week, town counsel Paul DeRensis said wording of the citizens' petition article which appears in the warrant is flawed. At that time, proponents rejected a suggestion to have their article redrafted to direct selectmen to form a committee to investigate the shared-funding proposal.

They decided instead to have town meeting re-vote the same article it approved last spring.

And their minds had not changed by Monday night.

"We want to go forward," said Maria Plante, 790 Jerusalem Road, a spokesman for the shared-funding proponents.

Before the special town meeting got underway, they would not accept an 11th-hour effort by selectmen to draft an article to jointly appoint with the sewer commissioners a "Septic Financing Advisory Committee" to investigate and make a written report on its findings regarding public and private financing of the project.

Selectmen back the 50/50, user-town shared payment plan but

New high school athletic field to open

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

After two years of planning, leveling of land and a massive renovation of the athletic fields, Cohasset High's brand new football facility will have its official ribbon cutting on Sunday, Sept. 8.

The field, which can also be used for soccer, lacrosse and field hockey games, is surrounded by a brand new all-weather rubber track. The finished surface is expected to be constructed in the coming weeks, according to Wayne Sawchuk, the clerk-of-the-works on the project.

The entire project is expected to give the high school athletic program a major boost. The field hockey team had been playing on a smaller-than-regulation-size field and the track team's "home" meets were held at Scituate High because the former track was inadequate to compete on.

Sawchuk said the the project is still ongoing. New bleachers, which can seat 500 spectators will be installed on the home-team side of the field and be ready for the homecoming game in October.

Sewer counsel bill gets nod from selectmen

Selectmen approved payment of $11,176.56 last week to the town's sewer counsel Goodwin, Procter &Hoar.

At a later date, the board will discuss whether to retain special town counsel for litigation matters relating to the town sewer project. Non-litigation issues are being handled by the Cohasset's new town counsel Paul DeRensis, selectmen said.

Selectman Nan Roth favored keeping Goodwin, Procter & Hoar, which is paid $265 hour, on board for the time being.

"Paul DeRensis is doing so much right now," she said about town counsel's workload.

But Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the matter should be put on a future agenda for discussion.

Road resurfacing is set for Aug. 19

Road resurfacing is tentatively scheduled to begin Monday, Aug. 19, weather permitting, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said.

It will start at the intersection of Doane and Church Streets and continue down Beechwood Street to #339. Next will be Beechwood Street from Todd Road to Mealys' Pond followed by all of Summer Street and a section of North Main Street from Rocky Lane to the Hingham Line. Dates and locations are subject to change. Residents may experience some delays and should allow extra time for travelling these areas.

Village farmers' market update

The Cohasset Village Farmers' Market is being sponsored by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce through the efforts of the Village Revitalization Committee.

The market will be held every Thursday from 4 to 8 p.m. through Sept. 26. These hours were chosen to attract people who cannot do their shopping during the conventional 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. time. The market area is located in the municipal parking lot (in front of the old garage), behind Cohasset Village. Ample parking will therefore be available for both vendors and customers. Set up time will begin at 3:30 p.m. on the day of the market. Clean up is planned at 8 p.

Vendors will sell items such as fruits, vegetables, fresh and dried flowers, herbs, oils and vinegars, breads and baked goods. Confections and homemade crafts are also welcome.

Additionally, live folk music will be performed during selected farmers' market evenings.

Future performers are: Aus. 15, South Shore singer/songwriter Mark Purcell; Aug. 22, South Shore singer/songwriter Mark Purcell; and Aug. 29, singer/songwriter David Crossland.

ConCom won't allow landfill ramp

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

The Conservation Commission last week refused a request by representatives for Cohasset Heights Landfill to alter an administrative consent order which was approved last May for the removal of silt in the Area D section of the landfill.

The commission is in receipt of a letter from Cohasset Heights' engineering firm, SITEC, requesting they be allowed to construct a ramp for use by heavy machinery in the landfill's Area D pool section to help with the removal of large amounts of silt which had previously been brought into that area.

Additionally, SITEC asked that the ramp be allowed to remain in place for one year in the event further excavation of silt was necessary.

In the letter, CHL consultant Rod Gaskill contends the landfill needs the ramp to help in efforts to restore the area's wetlands, and that continued delays in completion of the work have been due to factors outside CHL's control.

Under the May order, CHL was to have completed the silt removal by the end of July.

The Conservation Commission is concerned about the large amounts of silt in the landfill's Area D location and feels that delays on CHL's part are attempts to do less than what the May administrative order called for.

Commissioner Sue Cope decried what the commission feels are stalling tactics by CHL in claiming they are looking for wetlands, and stated that silt removal should be completed "regardless of what (new) vegetative cover has come in."

Commission member Jeff Waal, echoing the board's conservative approach to the landfill, said a ramp had not been part of the original plan; therefore, Cohasset Heights should proceed with what was discussed and approved without further delay.

"We know there is going to be some damage to vegetation, but what we are trying to do is get it (Area D) back to its original state," he said.

On another Cohasset Heights matter, the commissioners reviewed a draft copy of a letter prepared by Conservation Commission Chairman Thomas Callahan which is to be sent to the state Department of Environmental Protection in response to CHL's "order of appeal" against the town's refusal to allow landfill expansion.

The letter will reiterate the commission's concerns pertaining to health and safety issues, as well as objections to any proposed landfill expansion.

• In other business, the commission voted unanimously to issue a "cease and desist" order to the developer of Jerusalem Road Estates for what they felt were violations of the Wetlands Protection Act.

• Conservation Commission consultant Paul Shea said the developer had cut a "20-foot swath through a stream channel and the 100-foot buffer zone, across wetlands and had altered the area," and that this violation had not been created by any type of accident.

• Waal said the commission will hold a show cause hearing for an explanation from the developer for his actions.

• The commission set a date of Aug. 17 for a second inspection of a newly built wall at the residence of 20 Hobart Lane. The wall had not been in original plans when a septic system was installed, and the commission wanted another look at the site prior to closing the matter.

• Approval was granted for construction of a one-story sun porch at 127 Nichols Road. The addition would be to the southwest corner of the residence.

• Finally, Shea gave the board a brief update on the progress of the Shaw's Supermarket construction in Cushing Plaza. He said work at the site was proceeding quite well, and stated that in his dealings with Shaw's engineers, he felt they "were doing the right thing."

Water Country trip planned

On Friday, Aug. 23, the Teen Center will sponsor a day trip to Water Country in Portsmouth, N.H. The cost is $20. Permission slips must be picked up and returned to the Recreation Department by Friday, Aug. 16. All seventh-, eighth-, and ninth-graders are invited.

Chamber cookout set for Aug.16

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce will hold a cookout Friday, Aug. 16, at the Lightkeepers House from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. There will be food, soda, activities for children and an opportunity to watch boats sail into the harbor.

Petition sought to help halt underage drinking

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

A fatal car crash following a high school graduation party held in town, has heightened the importance of several Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee initiatives.

Group members touched briefly on the tragedy at their Tuesday meeting and brainstormed ways to better get their message out.

Gregory Smith, 18, of Marshfield was a guest at a graduation party hosted by John Lennon, who owns a fuel company in Cohasset. Smith was killed when his car hit a telephone pole. Police say he had been drinking.

Lennon faces a charge of providing alcohol to minors but his lawyer maintains that witnesses have said that Smith brought his own alcohol to the party.

"The loss of life is the single most important thing here. It was a needless tragedy," said Keith Knowles, a member of the HALT (Helping All to Learn Together) committee, a federally-funded organization.

Knowles was invited to the meeting to present committee members with effective ways to garner support, and perhaps eventually change public attitudes towards underage drinking.

Some members said that a lot of parents don't feel that underage drinking is unacceptable.

Knowles suggested that the group circulate a petition, which reads, "I believe that the illegal use of alcohol, tobacco and other drugs is unacceptable and unhealthy for our community."

That petition will carry a lot of weight, he said. If 500, or 1000, residents sign the petition, the committee can bring it to a place that is tolerant of underage drinking, and say, "X number of residents in this community object to this."

On the other hand, Knowles continued, if only 100 people sign the petition, the committee can say, "Is this the way the community really feels about underage drinking?"

Members were supportive of the idea, and may even bring the petition to the special town meeting on Monday night.

This initiative ties in with the Safe Homes program, which the committee has been supporting for six years. In Safe Homes, parents promise not to condone underage drinking and a list of "safe homes" is provided.

Approximately 15 percent of the parents of junior and senior high school students in town participate in safe homes.

Literature on the program is sent to homes in October and January. Parents are asked to sign a form which, in a nutshell, states that they won't serve alcohol to people underage, and will supervise their children's parties.

Knowles also spoke about the Drug Free weekend that was held in Cohasset for several years, but was not held last year.

The weekend was a great success, and brought an awareness to both the young and old of the community , he said.

Knowles suggested that the committee enlist the support of every organization in town to help get the weekend off the ground.

Some members agree that parents' attitudes towards underage drinking are changing.

Others weren't so sure.

Member David Cogill, who is also a police officer, said that there are still a lot of parents who just want to go down to the police station and retrieve their children, who have been picked up by the police for drinking.

They don't want charges filed, he said.

Cohasset police will appeal ruling on grad party host

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset police say they will appeal a court ruling not to charge Surry Drive resident John Lennon, 47, with contributing to the delinquency of a child.

Police disagree with Clerk Magistrate Stephen Abany, who said there was not enough evidence to bring the charge, which pertains to juveniles (children under 17 years old).

However, Abany did decide Monday to issue a charge of providing alcohol to a minor against Lennon, who hosted a graduation party at his Cohasset home in June where teenagers allegedly were served alcohol. That charge can carry a penalty of up to six months in prison and a fine of $2,000.

Cohasset police sought both complaints after several witnesses, all minors who were guests at the party, came forward. Police began investigating the party after an alcohol-related crash claimed the life of one of the guests, Gregory Smith, 18, of Marshfield.

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said Monday the matter should be heard by a judge.

He explained that Lennon also has the right to appeal Abany's decision to issue a complaint on the charge of providing alcohol to a minor.

Lennon's attorney, Bernard Hamill of Quincy, could not be reached for comment, but issued the following statement:

"John Lennon categorically denies serving Gregory Smith alcohol on the night of June 22, 1996. Several witnesses have come forward stating that Gregory Smith illegally obtained his own alcohol and brought it to the Lennon property on June 22, 1996. John Lennon hired a bartender to monitor the serving of alcohol who refused to serve Gregory Smith or any other minor. It is disturbing that the authorities have not focused part of their investigation on where Gregory Smith illegally obtained alcohol."

Allan Tufankjian, a Brockton attorney representing Smith's parents, Donald and Donna Smith of Marshfield, has filed a civil lawsuit against Lennon in Brockton Superior Court.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

Meeting to reconvene on center stage Monday

borrowing.

Fitzsimmons said he questioned the margin of defeat of Article 1 and contends that many people left after the hand-count was started.

"I don't know how many left before the final vote," he said.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said 1,589 or 31 percent of the town's 5,183 registered voters attended town meeting.

Marlette said at 470, the "yes" hand count was close to the paper ballot "yes" count of 448 indicating most school opponents did participate in the paper balloting. (A yes vote supported Article 1 to stop the project).

But to 74-year-old Norman Brown, 7 Windsor Rd., that isn't the point.

"I am absolutely disgusted," said Brown who was still steaming when he called the Cohasset Mariner the following day. "At 12:15 a.m., it was freezing and no one brought the ballot (box) up to us to vote. I'll never go to another town meeting."

Marlette, who stated at a pre-town meeting meeting that he preferred a secret ballot, followed the will of Monday's town meeting and initiated a hand-count. But after an incident of voter fraud was alleged (when a voter held up a ballot in each hand) and a citizen claimed that a section had not been counted during the "yes" vote, Marlette stopped the hand-count and ordered the secret ballot, a process that took about two hours.

"Although the tellers assured me they hadn't missed a section nor counted the vote twice — I felt I had to take remedial measures and go immediately to the (secret) ballot," he said.

Opponents of the school — who collected 500 signatures to call a special town meeting to kill the school project — limited their formal presentations to about 18 minutes.

Taking much longer, proponents including representatives from the school facilities committee, selectmen, school committee, capital budget committee, and advisory board thoroughly detailed the history behind the school project including site selection, cost, tax impact, and need.

Max Pounder of the design review board, which took a hard look at the project, said that board is always "project-neutral." His remarks aimed to clarify the flap created when the board criticized the school's design.

"Clearly Cohasset needs a greatly improved elementary-school facility," he said explaining that it is the role of the design review board to make a critique of what is submitted on a project.

"What we do appears to be a negative stance but it is not," he said.

"This board has not taken a position opposed to this project."

Letters to newspapers, town-wide mailings, and lobbying efforts by both sides set the stage for Monday's special town meeting which drew the largest crowd ever.

Emotions on both sides of the issue continued to run high inside the tent, donated for the event by South Shore Playhouse Associates, parent company of the Music Circus.

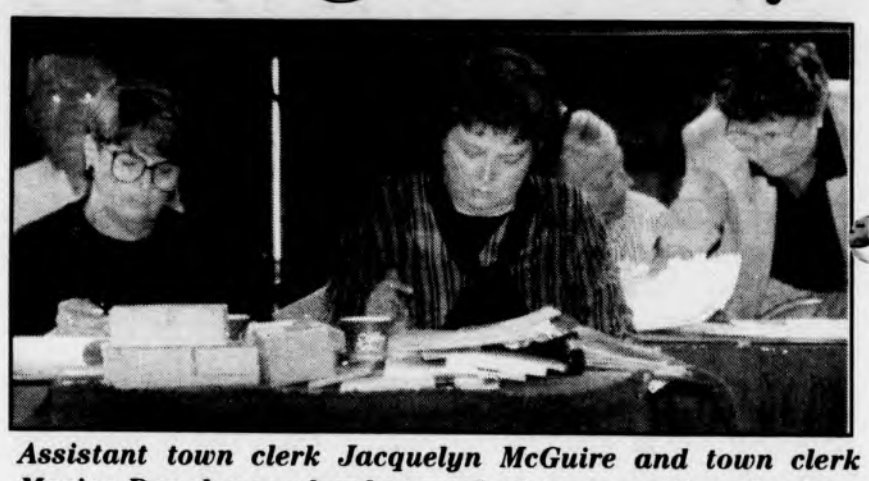
Although many senior citizens oppose the school and fear their taxes will price them out of town, the issue was not solely split along age lines.

Opposing the school, Jennifer Knowles, 21, 15 Border St., spoke about not being able to afford to live in town.

And Dr. Robert Sceery, 75, 51 Gammons Rd., a school supporter, talked about growing up in the depression and the sacrifices his father made to send him to school.

"We cannot give our children the best education in the existing school," he said.

Jack Creighton, 48 James Lane, said the school was a "band aid solution." He said an education crisis is looming because other town schools need repair and the entire system needs to be addressed.



Assistant town clerk Jacquelyn McGuire and town clerk Marion Douglas are hard at work at town meeting Monday.

Ron Goodwin, 166 Sohier St., said it saddened him to see "the town so divisive on the issue" but supported the school and charged its opponents have no alternative plan.

Fitzsimmons said his group's plan was for selectmen to appoint an ad-hoc committee made up of representatives from town boards to find an Osgood solution in a "sound, open manner."

Former selectman Jane Goedecke, 100 Nichols Rd., spoke passionately about a growing lack of respect for town officials. She responded to earlier remarks made by school opponents labelling town officials as "politicians."

She warned if the integrity and motivation of citizens who serve is constantly questioned — then "kooks, crackpots and those who have hidden agendas would fill those jobs."

Owen O'Malley, 29 Sohier St., asked that the state be asked to "bend the rules a little" and provide reimbursement for fixing up the 70-year-old Osgood School. He said if the school is in as bad shape as officials claim — it should be under the "wrecking ball in the morning."

A low point of the meeting occurred when Marlette snapped at Bruce McKinnon, 70 Fair Oaks Lane, a vocal member of the anti-taxpayer group, who ordered the moderator to stick with the secret ballot.

An exasperated Marlette said harshly "if you weren't so caught up in yourself and would listen to me" and explained he was fed up because he'd listened to McKinnon's demands for days.

Marlette said Tuesday he regretted the outburst.

"It was not constructive, it was destructive. It should have been private, not public," he said.

Sewer article still to be decided don't want the town to face an override election this fall with primaries and a presidential election on the horizon. If Article 2 passes on Monday, selectmen would have to call for an override election within 45 days.

They urged homeowners in North Cohasset to hold off until the spring town meeting when funding of their project could be combined with the 440 homes slated to be sewered in Central Cohasset.

But proponents don't want to wait to resolve the funding issue and feel in light of their narrow 34-vote override defeat at the ballot box May 4, they are willing to fight for another override to pay for 50 percent of the project.

Plante hoped last Monday's session would address Article 2 but, due to the lateness of the hour, the meeting adjourned to this Monday.

Plante felt the North Cohasset sewer article could be discussed while the ballots from the school article were being counted and while there was still a quorum in the hall.

Five articles to be decided Monday

Special town meeting will reconvene at 7:30 p.m., Monday (Aug. 19) at the Music Circus.

Monday's session rejected Article 1 which could be up for reconsideration this Monday. There are five more articles on the warrant including one asking the school site be moved closer to the Deer Hill School. Abutters to the proposed new school say they have a better site plan than the one presented by the school facilities committee.

How the Straits Pond sewer project should be paid for is also on the special town meeting agenda. Another article sets the stage for low-interest loans for septic system repairs. There is also an article asking for money to be appropriated to cover the cost of town meeting and one seeking approval and funding of the Konohasset Clerical-Custodial Association contract.

As with this week's session, there will be parking attendants and police details to help with traffic and parking. Wireless microphones will be available at the Music Circus to facilitate debate. The concession stand will also be open with proceeds going to benefit the Milliken Field project.

Anyone with baby-sitting needs should contact Sarah Markert at 383-6124.

Voters will be directed to aisles where checkers will be seated at both sides of the entrances. Town Moderator George Marlette said he would open up another check-in aisle Monday to help get people signed in more quickly.

Senior Olympics to air August 15

The Senior Olympics Games held June 19 in Attleboro will be aired on the town's local Continental Cablevision station Thursday, Aug. 15, at 7 p.m.

Residents from Cohasset Knoll and seven other nursing facilities met the challenge to compete in the first annual Senior Olympics Games presented by the Northeast Region, Area 10 facilities of Beverly Nursing & Rehabilitation Services.

The day's events provided seniors with a sense of pride and accomplishment. Residents of all the facilities were presented with gold medals and MVP certificates as well as trophies won in various events.

Volunteers to drive shuttle bus are needed

Did you know that Cohasset Elder Affairs is looking for volunteers to drive its shuttle bus? The need is for one morning or afternoon a month, which gives seniors an opportunity to do their shopping, banking or keep appointments they may have. For more information on how you can help, call the Council at 383-9112.

To all of you who remember the late Woody Williams and Jackie Williams, you will be saddened to learn of the passing of their son, Scott Alan Williams, on July 13. He was 36-years-old. Scott contracted diabetes when he was six-years-old and had been fighting it ever since.

Ironically, Scott had just received a new kidney about three days before his death from cardiac failure, and was eagerly looking forward to a new life. Scott was living in Florida near his mother and sister, Linda. His brother, Kent, lives in Kentucky. A family service was held at Woodside Cemetery, where, at Scott's request, he was buried next to his father.

Tabor Academy sends news concerning another Cohasset resident, Erica Dean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Dean, who will be entering the school as a freshman this fall. She completed Tabor Academy's "Orientation at Sea" program, which brings together 12 to 14 students, Tabor faculty and student crew members for six days of sailing, exploring and learning along the coast of Maine aboard the 90-foot SSV Tabor Boy.

The program exposes incoming students to the ocean around them with a general introduction to oceanography, marine biology and related environmental issues. Erica earned half a semester credit in nautical science for her participation in the program.

Here are two events to mark on your September calendar, and you'll be glad you did! On Sept. 7, from noon until sunset, there will be the Christine Burke Scholarship Fund Clambake on Sandy Beach. The requested donation is $30 per person, which includes live entertainment and a delicious meal that will include lobster, chicken, steamers, clam chowder and corn on the cob, as well as tons of hot dogs and watermelon for the little ones.

As a special feature this year, there will be a big old pig roast, donated right from the farm by Joe and Brenda Black, all the way from Camden, Ohio. For ticket info, call the American Legion Post at 383-0815. The rain date is Sept. 8.

Last month, four Cohasset boys took part in the AAU baseball championship for the 17-and-under category. Burke Davis, J.L. Williams, Jared Hardwick and Paul-Michael Quintin played for the Mass Metro baseball team and qualified for the championship, which was held in Charlotte, N.C., by coming in third in the state championships.

Paul-Michael then went to Coco Beach, Fla., where he was in the National Invitational Tournament for 16-year-old and under players. There were many trophies and medals because they came in sixth in the country!

The boys want to thank all who contributed to their fund-raising efforts. As you can see, they benefitted greatly from them (and you!).

Hats off to Scott L. Moe. Boston University sends us word that he has been named to the dean's list for the spring semester.

We received the most clever birth announcement last week — a "sweet" way to let the news of a birth be known to all. On the front of the Hershey's candy bar wrapper are the words, "Here she is — Allison Frances Burke, Net. Wt. 8 pounds, 4 ounces." On the back, her vital statistics are given — "Baked, July 30, 1996, serving size, 19.5 inches, delivery of goods: 12:42 p.m., location: Newton, Mass." Ingredients listed were sugar and spice and everything nice. At the bottom of the candy bar was written, "Mfd. by Karen and David" — Karen and David Burke, that is! Little Allison is the fourth grandchild of Dr. Roger and Ann Pompeo, and to say they are pleased and proud is putting it mildly — everyone is madly in love with little Allison, and she is beautiful! Congrats to all of you!

New board members and 12 new overseers and trustees-at-large were elected by the board of trustees of Plimoth Plantation, the living history museum of 17th-century Plymouth. Marilyn T. Keane of Boston and Cohasset, a director of the World Affairs Council and chairman of their Diplomats off the Record series, and an overseer of WGBH Boston, was elected as a trustee. Mrs. Keane previously served as an overseer.

Middlebury College sends us word of three Cohasset students. Robin M. Lawrence, son of Dr. and Mrs. Robin M. Lawrence, has attained dean's list status. Kristine A. Pozatek, daughter of Ellie and Zig Pozatek, has been named a college scholar, the highest recognition for academic achievement, for the spring term at the school. Last but not least, Erin K. Steimle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund A. Steimle, has also been named a college scholar for the spring term. Hearty congrats to all of you!

Please give a huge Cohasset welcome to Elizabeth Baker, the new daughter of Bet and Mark Baker, and baby sister to four-year-old Katie, who is getting so big! Elizabeth was born July 15.

Congratulations go to Brett MacQuarrie of Cohasset, a junior at Northfield Mount Hermon School, who has earned academic honors for the spring term.

That's it for the week. Please call with your news!

Time to move on

There is nothing to be gained by reconsidering Monday's special town meeting vote rejecting Article 1 which asked to stop the $9.9 million school project.

And proponents of Article 1, seeking to do so, risk losing their credibility.

Those of us who were there at the Music Circus heard impassioned pleas and arguments on both sides of the issue.

But when all was said and done, the school — and we believe good sense — prevailed.

Concerned Cohasset Taxpayers forced the town meeting in the middle of August. They wanted the school debate opened up again and got their wish. The results, however, did not go their way.

With a record-breading turnout that exceeded all predictions, Monday's first session of the special town meeting did not go smoothly. People grew impatient, tired and, ironically for August, were even cold.

But the meeting was run fairly and democratically. Yes, school proponents gave longer formal presentations than the school opponents who were much more concise. That was a matter of style, not fairness.

Town Moderator George Marlette lost his temper briefly and there were some allegations of voter impropriety during a hand count.

It seemed to take forever to get the secret ballot underway. Mr. Marlette felt it was critical to explain and re-explain so citizens were not confused. And it was confusing because a no vote meant yes for the school; and a yes vote meant no for the school.

In the end, the votes were counted and the school will go forward.

The 437-vote margin on Article 1 is a mandate for the school. We urge those who remain opposed to the project — to accept the outcome and back off.

As architect, Jim Sandell, 24 Stevens Lane, said at the meeting Monday, there are bumps along the way in this process.

"That's the price we pay, building a public building in a public forum in a public arena."

Little doubt should remain now that town boards are working together on this project to bring Cohasset the best elementary school possible for the money.

Plans for the new school have been aired, debated and scrutinized, ad nauseam. The finances have been detailed over and over again.

We hope that any effort to reconsider Article 1 will be dropped so we get on with the other controversial items of business on the special town meeting agenda. Those include a citizens petition article to move the school site closer to the Deer Hill School, which could jeopardize the project, and another on how to pay for the Straits Pond sewer.

Thanks, Wig and Bob

We'd like to thank Wigmore Pierson, Continental Cablevision's Bob Belliveau and the cable volunteers who made televising Monday's town meeting possible. The program was aired in other towns, such as Scituate and Hingham. At the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham, several people from those towns told us they switched off the Republican convention to watch Cohasset's town meeting which was more exciting.

We think televising town government whether selectmen's meetings or town meetings provides a valuable service.

It is also hard work which is often not appreciated enough.

Cohasset taxes are reasonable

To the Editor:

In the Cohasset Mariner of Aug. 8, Bruce McKinnon wondered why the Cohasset tax rate is so much higher than Dover and Manchester-by-the-Sea. Using the figures he supplied from the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation, it appears that Cohasset assessed valuations are substantially below both Dover and Manchester-by-the-Sea. Each Cohasset resident is "worth" $114,786 of assessed valuation. Each Dover resident is "worth" $172,064 of assessed valuation. And Manchester-by-the-Sea residents are each "worth" $144,547 of assessed valuation.

Using Mr. McKinnon's figures, it appears that each Cohasset resident pays $1,664 in taxes; each Dover resident, $1,953. And each Manchester-by-the-Sea resident pays $1,663. I'm not sure why Mr. McKinnon wrote his letter. But I assume it was meant to cast Cohasset in a negative light. I don't see it this way. What I see is a town possessing a "very special quality of life" where real estate is substantially undervalued and taxes reasonable. And the chances of real estate increasing in value are far greater than in either Dover or Manchester-by-the Sea.

A message to the anti-school group

To the Editor:

To the anti-school, anti-tax contingent: Stop the madness. Do this town a favor and honor the votes of the townspeople and stop. Stop dividing the town. Stop making a mockery of democracy. You got your special Town Meeting — the debate was lengthy and you lost by a margin of 2-1. Children and excellence in modern education won. Leave it at that, please. Do not reconsider this vote.

To the abutters and proponents of Article VI (which would also kill the school project): When you bought your house, you knew it was next to town-owned property and that anything could go there. But you won't be living next to a dump, a landfill, cemetery, expressway or a train. You will be living adjacent to a new school, playgrounds and playfields that your kids can walk to. Please withdraw the article.

To all of the above: Please work within the system as a part of the solution and not as a source of aggravation and devisiveness.

To all of the citizens of Cohasset: See you back at the circus Monday night!

School supporters job is not done

To the Editor:

I am writing to thank everyone who came to the Music Circus Monday night and voted to oppose Article I. Unfortunately, our job is not done. A move was made to possibly reconsider the vote at the continuation of the meeting on Monday, Aug. 19.

Additionally, it is my understanding that Article 6, which proposes moving the new school from its current site, would also in effect kill the current new school project. This would happen because a change of site would cause us to lose our place for state funding. Also, the building would have to be redesigned to fit the topography of the Deer Hill site.

I urge you not to throw your vote Monday night away. Find a way to attend the continuance of the meeting, Monday, Aug. 19, at the Music Circus at 7:30 p.m. Vote no against reconsideration of Article 1. Stay and vote no against Article 6.

Thoughts on Monday night's town meeting shared

To the Editor:

I would like to share three thoughts on Monday night's Town Meeting.

Open debate: One prominent reason put forth by the Concerned Taxpayers for forcing another Town Meeting to discuss the new school project was the lack of open debate. They argued that there was not enough open debate about the process, the site and the design, and, they said, certainly not enough debate at last March's Town Meeting. However, the actions of the Concerned Taxpayers reveal their true view of open debate. They refused an open debate format for the proposed cable television program. At Monday night's Town Meeting, by requesting a secret ballot at 10:30 p.m., they turned what had been an orderly and open debate of the new school issue into a chaotic discussion of procedural rules. In the confusion that followed, which they had prompted, one of the Concerned Taxpayers loudly and rudely berated Mr. Marlette for not having set a time limit on the presentations of the town's own boards and committees. By my estimate, the six presentations of the town's boards and committees totaled about 75 minutes (from 8:30 to 9:45 p.m.), including an important statement by the Design Review Board. Do the Concerned Taxpayers really want open debate? I think not.

Politicians: Concerned Taxpayer Mr. Fitzsimmons repeatedly and derisively used the term "politicians" to describe the elected and appointed members of the towns boards and committees who voted almost unanimously to support the new school project. I personally found his tone and derision to be offensive. I would imagine that Rep. Murray and Sen. Hedlund, who were in attendance, also found this use of the term "politicians" offensive. Who are these "politicians"? Are they not our own friends and neighbors who have volunteered their time and talent for the good of the town? As Jane Goedeke pointed out, a continuation of such a personal and abusive tone of dissent will drive the capable and committed volunteers out of town service. Mr. Fitzsimmons' words represent an attack on the cooperative spirit of volunteerism which has always been a hallmark of this town.

The "Ad-Hoc" committee: In response to Mr. Goodwin's question regarding what solution the Concerned Taxpayers proposed for the school issue, the answer was an "ad-hoc" committee. Oh? And who would serve on this committee? Why, the very same "politicians" who have been involved in this project for the past 12 months. And what would be this committee's charge? To study the issue and make a recommendation. Hello? Am I missing something? Or is it transparently clear that the Concerned Taxpayers simply want to stop this project, and any project which represents a rational investment in the town's infrastructure? In fact, an "ad-hoc" committee of precisely the composition which the Concerned Taxpayers proposed has been working on this project since last September, and their recommendation — to build a new school — was approved in April. In fact, the committee continues to work together cooperatively to address the multiple issues which are normal for a project of this size. So, Concerned Taxpayers, although your article failed, you actually achieved your solution!

After a vigorous and "open debate," and based on the recommendation of the "politicians" who collectively comprise an "ad-hoc" committee of the most dedicated and knowledgeable town officials, the voters of Cohasset reaffirmed, by a 2 to 1 margin, their previous two votes. In the best interests of the town, the new school project will go forward.

Responsibility for behavior lies with the individual

To the Editor:

The impatience of angry and self-important boors who shout their views at the moderator, rather than waiting to be recognized, contributed greatly to the degeneration of the Music Circus town meeting.

Without self-discipline, patience and respect for others and for orderly process, a hoodlum is a hoodlum, whether possessed of an elementary school education or two advanced degrees, whether a laborer or a well-paid professional.

It's too easy to criticize the moderator for lack of firmness. But that doesn't relieve voters of responsibility for disciplined behavior, for knowing and following the rules designed to prevent a meeting from subverting itself into a feckless mob.

Those who departed immediately after casting their yes vote demonstrated one of the worst features of town meetings. That is the tendency to leave immediately their particular interest has been addressed, and to take no responsibility for other matters. No doubt they will join the cry that the subsequent secret ballot was illegal, and continue to waste everyone's time and patience. But the majority will was expressed (about 2 to 1) and that clear expression should take precedence over prattling about illegality. Does it serve the community to repeat the process merely to record again, but with less disputed legality, what is already well proven? Continuing to grasp at straws doesn't restore the credibility of the penny-wise and pound-foolish crowd. Next time they take on the big spenders, they had better establish credibility with more substantive arguments.

A newcomer reflects

To the Editor:

Eight years ago at the opening of the Republican National Convention I was in New Orleans amidst the frenzy and excitement of the convention cheering on the Republican regime. Eight years later on the opening night of the Republican National Convention I found myself in a crowded tent in Cohasset. There, without the bunting, balloons and fanfare of a national convention, I was able to observe the true essence of our democracy. The impassioned debate that took place on Monday night contrasted sharply with the contrived commercials on display in San Diego.

I observed, not participated in, the proceedings Monday night because as a new resident I had not researched the school issue sufficiently enough to express an opinion or cast a vote. I went to the meeting at the Music Circus hoping that I would receive enough information to make a decision and cast a vote. I left the meeting overwhelmed by the process, inspired by the residents' concern, and as undecided as when I entered.

I offer these observations from a perspective distinct from most in attendance that evening, as I have no affiliation with either side of the debate, and I have no knowledge of the personalities, histories, or background of the individuals in either camp. Although I had the benefit of being objective and impartial, I was not without my biases. As an ardent believer in governing bodies doing more with less, believing the government's money is the people's money, I am instinctively repelled by any tax increase initiatives. As a father of three young children, who seeks the best for his children, I am attracted to the notion of a clean, safe school facility. It was ultimately my inability to reconcile the differences in my two biases that led to my indecision and my yearning to know more.

Armed with few facts, my conflicting biases, and my eagerness to learn, I sat through the proceedings hoping to be convinced. I am not convinced either way. I need to do more research. But here are a few questions that still remain unanswered.

How is this debate being framed? Is the need for a new school born out of a one-time state government expense-sharing opportunity? Or is it a safety issue where children are in danger in a dilapidated, overcrowded, has-been facility? If the state funding opportunity wasn't available would the safety concerns and building condition issue have been sufficient enough to compel 1500 or so residents to come out on a late summer night screaming for their taxes to be raised? And if the conditions are as described, should the school be opened in September? Was the process rushed? Are there cheaper alternatives? Which tax increase figure can be believed – 30 percent, 50 percent, or 2 percent, which?

If there are only two options – renovate or build, and the difference in the net out-of-pocket expense is negligible, isn't it obvious the school should be built? Criticizing without offering solutions is always a precarious undertaking. Is it true the proponents of question one had no detailed financial alternative? When opportunities present themselves shouldn't we seize on them before they pass us by? Who are the beneficiaries of a new school, solely the parents of students attending the new school? Or does the entire town benefit from a thriving, healthy school system with updated facilities?

Although questions remain that have not been answered, I learned a lot Monday night ranging from lessons in economics to philosophy. I learned there is still a little child in many of us as temper tantrums and personal biases can alter ones objectivity. I learned that a marred, poorly run meeting can stifle the impact of an enlightened, well thought out debate. But most importantly, I learned the real heroes of our democracy are not those national figures who were standing at a podium in San Diego reading cue cards. Rather the heroes are those concerned parents and citizens who crammed into a theatre on a cool August night to insure the integrity of the town that they so clearly cherish.

WITH THE CANDIDATES

GOP cookout is Sept. 8

Cohasset Town Chairman Julie Guild, formerly of Hingham, has named the planning committee for the annual GOP cookout, scheduled for Sunday, Sept. 8, from 4:30 to 7 p.m. The cookout will be held at the Guild oceanfront home, 365 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset.

An internationally known jazz band, the Mark Kross Trio, will play the music of Benny Goodman, Duke Ellington and New Orleans jazz. Special guests will be former Secretary of Economic Affairs Gloria Larson and congressional, general court and county candidates from Barnstable, Bristol, Norfolk and Plymouth.

All South Shore residents are invited to attend. A $25 donation per couple, or $13 per person, is requested. Reservations must be made in advance by calling Polly Logan (383-0031), Carl Harris (749-7715) or Ann Collins (749-0817), all of Hingham; Joan Francis of Scituate (545-1361); Audrey MacDonald of Duxbury (934-0366); or Dana Toland of Weymouth (337-4383). A limited number of tickets will be available at the cookout for $15. Checks for reservations may be sent to: Cohasset GOP Cookout, c/o Janet Fogarty, 15 Cedarledge Village, Cohasset 02025.

The following individuals have been named to the cookout planning committee: Mark Baker, Patricia Buckley, R. Murray Campbell, John Flanagan, William Grimm, Peter Guild, Kevin O'Donnell, Samuel Pease, Douglas Peck, Dennis Roth, Matthew Steele, Grace Tuckerman, Judy Volungis, George Watts Jr., Joan Young, Michael Bittel, Polly Logan and Janet Fogarty, treasurer for the cookout.

Johnston wants tuition deduction

Phil Johnston, Democratic candidate for the 10th Congressional District, says the government should grant tax deductions for college tuitions.

Johnston said he will seek from Congress a $10,000 annual tax deduction for students or their parents, "whoever pays the bills," he noted.

"We want everyone who wants to go to college to go there. The government should facilitate the process because a good education is the best way this society can advance," Johnston said. "The government helped finance college education with amazing success with its GI Bill, which helped send thousands of World War II veterans to college. There is no valid reason why the government can not do more than it is now doing for men and women seeking higher education."

Johnston praised the federal government's present college loan program, while denouncing efforts in Congress to slash the loan program budget.

"I strongly support the college loan program. It has made college possible for millions of Americans. It is reprehensible that Newt Gingrich and some of the other Republican members of Congress want to cut the program," said Johnston. Both he and his wife, Beverly, obtained government college loans to help finance their education at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Coastal Coalition plans rally for Weld/Kerry debate

The Coastal Coalition of the South Shore is planning a rally at the next Weld/Kerry debate, Monday, Aug. 19, at Channel 5 Studios, Needham.

A bus will leave Station Street, Hingham (parking lot behind Tosca's) at 5 p.m. The debate is scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. Donations will be accepted to help pay for bus transportation.

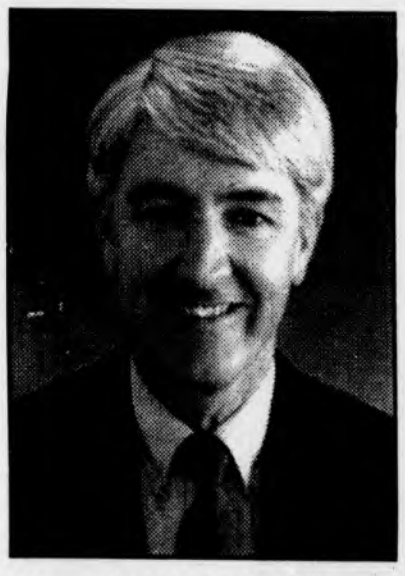
Ed Teague's Eye on Congress
Tax Reform

HYANNIS Ma -- For the first time in recent memory the Cape and South Shore is in the midst of a race for an open U.S. Congressional seat. And it's no surprise to anyone in the 10th Congressional District that taxes have emerged as a major issue. It's also not a surprise that Ed Teague is the only candidate who has introduced a comprehensive plan for cutting taxes.



Congressional Candidate Ed Teague

Ed Teague's Ten Point Plan for the Cape and South Shore details exactly what he'll do to cut taxes for working families. "Americans are working harder, but they're taking home less money," Teague said. "By cutting taxes, every working person will see their wages increase because they'll be keeping more of their paychecks."

When it comes to cutting taxes, Teague is no Johnny-come-lately. For years he has pushed for tax cuts in the State House of Representative. Now he's putting his experience to work as a Congressional Candidate in the debate on federal taxes. "It's outrageous that today's tax burden amounts to a third of the typical family's income," says Teague.

Among Ed Teague's tax cutting initiatives is a $500 per child tax credit and a $500 credit for families who care for an elderly parent or grandparent. He would also increase the maximum IRA contribution to $2500 and eliminate the tax penalty on married couples. At the same time, Teague has pledged to fight for a Super Majority Law which requires a two-thirds majority vote for Congress to increase taxes. "We simply must make it harder for big spending politicians to take our money," states Teague.

One of Teague's most interesting proposals deals with the approximately 1% of Americans who actually feel they are undertaxed. Teague would change the tax forms to allow these taxpayers to contribute more of their own money instead of advocating higher taxes for the rest of us. He'd also allow them to direct their additional contributions to the government program of their choice.

Ed Teague is proud to be the only candidate in the race who has said he would cut taxes, and detailed how he would do it. "Cutting taxes and giving money back to those who earned it is the first step toward restarting our economy," Teague said. "And improving the economy is the first step toward getting all of America back to work."

You can obtain a free copy of Ed Teague's Ten Point Plan by calling Teague for Congress at 508-790-1200.

Beware reverse-mortgage mania

Don't let a bad deal burn up your home equity

By Elizabeth Macdonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

The offer is inviting. Why not take the equity built up in your home and turn it into a reliable income stream? Such is the notion behind one of the hottest new financial instruments out there – the reverse mortgage.

Recently, the Department of Housing and Urban Development proposed expanding a program allowing senior citizens to use the value of their homes to supplement their incomes. Under HUD's program, people age 62 and older who either own their homes or maintain a nominal mortgage balance can draw against their house's equity, either in monthly payments, a lump sum, or in a credit line. The loan doesn't have to be repaid until the home is sold, or the borrower moves out or dies.

Lenders offering this loan can be insured against losses by HUD's Federal Housing Administration. This pilot program is limited to 50,000 participants, and is effective through Sept. 2000 – HUD wants to open it to more than 12 million senior citizens over age 62, and extend it indefinitely. So far, HUD – which makes money off these loans from the premiums charged – has insured 16,000 reverse mortgages for older Americans.

The reverse mortgage was born in California. It promises a borrower a set amount of monthly payments. That amount is based on certain factors: The percentage of equity a senior citizen has in the home, an annual percentage rate applied against that equity, the appraised value of the home, and the borrower's life expectancy.

Reverse mortgages are particularly attractive to retirees or anyone else on a fixed income. Today, many of the nation's 13 million senior citizens are increasingly looking to turn an estimated $750 billion worth of home equity into quick cash with reverse mortgages, according to Ken Scholen, director of the National Center for Home Equity Conversion in Apple Valley, Minn.

Not surprisingly, such complexity often hides gigantic charges.

Reverse mortgages work much like home-equity loans. Borrowers typically draw between 30 and 80 percent of their home equity in the form of a fixed monthly payment or credit line. The borrower then agrees to repay the balance due if he or she moves from the residence. Repayment is secured by a first trust deed on the borrower's home – when the borrower moves or dies, the lender is repaid from the proceeds of the sale. Payments are not taxable, and don't affect Social Security benefits. Interest costs can be deducted on your tax return when the house is sold.

Unlike regular home-equity loans, reverse mortgages have no income requirements. Furthermore, home-equity loans and credit lines are typically paid off within 10 years; reverse-mortgage payments usually last as long as you live in your home.

However, some lenders cook up outrageous calculations based on laughable life expectancies. The longer the term of the reverse mortgage, the greater the chance that fees and interest charges associated with it will skyrocket.

As reverse mortgages proliferate, it's smart to protect yourself or your parents.

Educate yourself. Request the free 47-page booklet, "Homemade Money," by mailing a self-addressed postcard to AARP Home Equity Information Center, 601 E St. NW, Washington, D.C., 20049.

Also, check out government-backed reverse mortgages and truth in lending rules covering these loans, get reliable professional advice before you sign, question the loan's terms, and use reverse mortgages as a tax-planning tool.

If your estate is worth more than $600,000, encumbering your home with a reverse mortgage could shrink your assets below that threshold, thereby avoiding stiff federal estate-tax rates as high as 55 percent. Consider borrowing from your kids. With the help of a family lawyer or sharp financial planner, set up your own reverse mortgage with your adult child. Your offspring would then pay you a fixed sum equal to a certain percentage of the equity in your home. You'll get the cash, your children will reap the tax benefits of depreciation of the real estate, and you'll skip high fees.

Plus, your asset will stay right where you want it – at home.

(Elizabeth Macdonald is financial editor for Worth magazine.)

'Today we get more letters inquiring about reverse mortgages than any other issue, since they are so complicated.'

Picking a mutual fund based on one terrific year can be risky business. Chances are the next year – your year – won't be nearly as good. But by including long-term performance in your overall analysis, the odds of picking a winner may improve. Consider the top-rated funds from Fidelity on the accompanying chart.[1]

Whether you're pursuing dynamic growth or a more conservative approach to stock fund investing, your search for the right mutual fund should start with Fidelity.

Naturally, past performance is no guarantee of future results. And there's always a chance that you can have a loss or a gain when you sell your shares.

But performance over time can be a good indicator of a quality investment. That's why it's one of the key components in Morningstar's ratings. In fact, Fidelity's long-term performance is one of the reasons we've managed to turn out more top-rated funds than anyone else.[1]

Miles to go before he rests

Three-time winner Bill Rodgers is just warming up for more road-racing glory

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Eight months before Bill Rodgers gained international prominence with his legendary American-record win in the 1975 Boston Marathon, he previewed things to come in a most unlikely location.

Racing over winding roads and past sandy beaches, Rodgers easily defeated Olympian Marty Liquori in a small, road race on Cape Cod.

And though Liquori provided little challenge to Rodgers over the 7.1 miles, it was a significant race for the 26-year-old road-racer. The victory was one of Rodgers' first over a "marquee" name in American track and field.

Career-wise, the race was a significant one in name recognition for the man whose name is now synonymous with road racing around the world.

"I was on my way up in the sport and the win gained me some recognition in New England," said the 48-year-old Rodgers, who possesses the same drive that led him to victory in nearly every major road race in the country over his 22-year career.

For Rodgers, Falmouth eventually marked the start of a period in his career where he was deemed "King of the Roads."

The heavy hitters began to emerge from the woodwork and the run from Woods Hole to Falmouth Heights started packing in highly competitive fields. None were bigger than Frank Shorter.

"Tommy asked me to write to Frank to come down and run," Rodgers said with a smile. "Frank showed up and beat me. That wasn't a very nice thing to do to the host."

The friendly rivalry between Shorter and Rodgers quickly emerged. The two greatest road-racers in the world re-defined the sport in the United States during the mid-1970's to early '80s. Millions of Americans began running during this period and the "Boom" was underway.

The pair ran side by side in '75 and '76 through the early miles of the race as the rest of the field quickly faded into the background. At the time, however, it was Shorter's track background which proved to be the deciding factor in his victories.

"Frank would always put in a surge at about 2-1/2 miles," Rodgers said. "I'd hold back because the pace was a little too quick and I didn't want to go into oxygen debt.

"I couldn't run away from the leaders at the start anyway. My marathon endurance would come into play later in my races. I'd try to run at a pace where I was exerting pressure over the entire course."

Rodgers' competitive fires are burning as fiercely as ever, though he can no longer challenges the new breed of younger, world-class runners.

Rodgers won't be in the 9,000-runner field for Sunday's race, but he is among the top master runners in the country with several American records to his credit. Falmouth is still very much a part of his agenda.

One of Rodgers' goals is to set the 50-and-over record at Falmouth.

Rodgers already has the distinction of being the only runner ever to win both the open and masters division of the race.

"I was pleased with that (1988 race) because my time was faster than my winning time in 1974," he said.

Over the years Rodgers has staged some of his most thrilling road-racing duels at Falmouth against the most recognized athletes in the sport.

Falmouth has always been a key race for Rodgers, and one of his favorites. At no time was that more evident than 1978, probably Rodgers' most productive year on the roads.

Rodgers was in the midst of an incredible string of races that saw him win 33 of 35 competitions he entered.

The world turned out for the '78 race and there was no question Rodgers was the man the world-class field was keying on.

Salazar was back after finishing second the year before. This time the University of Oregon student was determined as ever to be the first across the line in Falmouth Heights.

Olympian Craig Virgin, who went on to win the race in '79, was another favorite. Peachtree Road Race winner Mike Roche was in the field, along with Michigan-transplant Greg Meyer and Randy Thomas.

Olympian Gary Bjorklund, who pushed Rodgers for 15 miles in the '77 New York City Marathon, and would do the same in '78 was in the field, as was his teammate Mike Slack.

There were whispers beforehand that Slack and Bjorklund were set to pull the field through a lightning-fast 4:10 first mile. Rodgers' start at Falmouth was always a quick one, but he had no intention of running the first mile alongside the pair of Minnesota runners.

"It's a nerve-racking start," Rodgers said. "You have to get out quickly because you have to have a good position around the first turn heading up the hill.

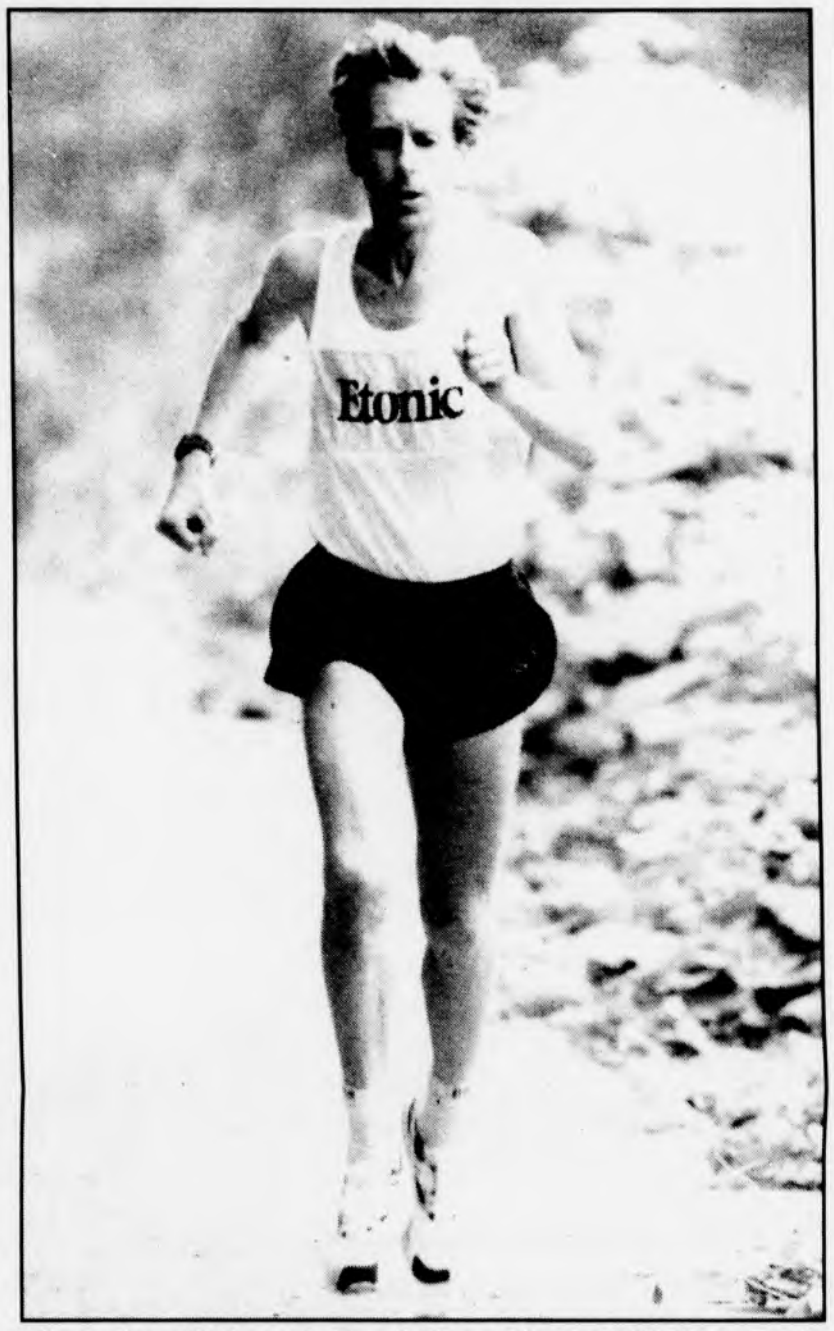
"It lends itself to a more explosive race."

At the start, Rodgers got off to a comfortable start, preferring to sit at the back of the huge lead pack. Slack and Bjorklund didn't hit the mile in 4:10, but the 4:25 split was still fast with a large lead pack clustered together.

By the time the leaders came out of the woods and surged onto sun-drenched Surf Drive, the pack had thinned down to Rodgers, Virgin, Roche and Salazar.

Virgin and Roche began to fall back at four miles, leaving Rodgers and Salazar alone in the lead. and Rodgers started to press hard. Salazar fell into place just behind him and the race was beginning to look more and more like the previous year's battle. Only this time, Salazar had something to prove.

Rodgers pressed the pace harder than he ever has along Falmouth's middle miles, but the tenacious Salazar wouldn't budge.



Three-time Falmouth Road Race winner Bill Rodgers is the only American ever to win both the open and master division of the 7.1 mile summer classic.

"I could see his shadow just behind me," Rodgers said. "I was forcing the pace, forcing the pace."

Daylight finally emerged between the two at 5-1/2 miles as Rodgers started to pull away. Salazar, dangerously dehydrated, faded to 10th place and came close to death after the race. His temperature soared to 108 degrees and the word around the Falmouth Heights baseball field was that a Roman Catholic priest was called to the scene to administer the last rites. Thankfully, Salazar's temperature began to drop and was up and around soon later. Despite the scare and the 10th-place finish, Salazar was still intent on winning Falmouth. He accomplished the feat with a pair of back-to-back victories in '81 and '82 where he completely dominated the world-class fields assembled.

"Racing Frank and having Alberto hanging onto me; they were all important," he said.

As for the course itself, Rodgers ranks the Bix 7-miler in Iowa as a more difficult route than Falmouth. But Rodgers doesn't consider Falmouth an easy course by any means. He calls it one of the most scenic he has ever run with a character that rivals the Boston Marathon.

Competitively, he wants to be remembered for his consistency during his prime years. The medals he won, the titles he came away with and the tough competition he never backed down from are a testament to an athlete who was truly the best of his era.

And there's still a lot to look forward to from The King.

Traveling All-Stars is a big success

By COACHES DOOLEY & DOWNING
Special to the Mariner

Congratulations to the Cohasset Summer Travel All-Star 10-year-olds for their winning season. Team members were Tim Anton, Jeff Barrett, Erik Belz, Robby Carpenter, Sean Connolly, Paul Cotter, Mark Davis, Steve Davis, Mike Devine, Mike Dooley, Jon Downing, Mike Ernst, Mike Geddes, Mike Hajjar and Reed Smith.

Some of their accomplishments this season included:

- beating or tying (at least once) Abington, Braintree, Holbrook, Milton and Rockland;
- maintaining a winning home record;
- holding a .500 road record; and
- winning a first-round playoff game over the Rockland All-Stars, 14-8.

These young players provided a lot of excitement and entertainment for the home fans this summer, and with a couple of seasons left, they will give us many more thrills at Barnes Little League Field.

Recreation soccer registration

The final soccer registration for girls and boys grades K to 7 will be held at the recreation department office, Cohasset Town Hall, from 9 a.m. to noon, Saturday, Sept. 7.

Soccer registration is for both fall recreational and spring soccer. The fee is $55 per child for each program. A separate check of $30 is necessary for the uniform deposit. Both checks should be payable to Cohasset Soccer Club.

Fall soccer begins Saturday, Sept. 21, and continues through Saturday, Nov. 16, 1996.

Call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-6791 with any questions about fall soccer.

New high school athletic field to open

New lights are being hooked up, as well as a new sound system. Plans call for a new press box and concession stand to be built.

Varsity football coach Bob Knurek said he is looking forward to playing on Friday nights again. Originally from Michigan, Knurek said there is a special electricity surrounding the night games. And with Cohasset playing in the South Shore League this season, the Skippers will be playing many more.

"I think when you get games back to Friday night it makes it more exciting," Knurek said. "People have so many things to do on Saturdays, but on Fridays it's just a couple of hours."

Knurek is impressed with the work which has been done on the field and is hoping it becomes a home-field advantage somewhere down the line for Cohasset.

"It's an exciting time combining the new field with our team getting back into the South Shore League," he said.

Work on the upper fields has been completed with addition and renovations to the tennis courts and a new baseball field. Teams in past seasons didn't have enough room to practice without interfering with another squad's workout. With the change, teams will have more than adequate space for their practices.

Initial work relocating water mains and clearing adjacent land had to be done in the early stages of the project.

"A number of things had to be done before work could be started," Sawchuk said.

Sawchuk credited the town departments for their overwhelming cooperation and backing of the project. said work wouldn't have been possible without the cooperation of several town departments.

"It has been a real town project," he said. "It's like putting up something neutral in someone's backyard. We were very fortunate to get a lot of cooperation between the various town departments."

Sawchuk emphasized the new facilities are there for the public to enjoy.

"The facility is for the entire town, not just for the high school. I got a call from a retired individual who was looking forward to using the track.

"It's very encouraging," Sawchuk said.

The lights above the track and football field are unique in that they light whichever venue is being used without wasting electricity lighting the other.

This fall the soccer and field hockey teams will have a certain number of games at night, an opportunity that never was an option in past seasons.

Young sailors take a bow

Mass Bay junior regatta a success

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Heading into last week's Mass Bay Sailing 1996 BayBank Junior Championships, co-director Chuck Peterson knew the only variable the various workers and committee members had no control over was the weather.

And despite the fact that mother nature hit Cohasset Harbor with a potpourri of weather conditions, the championship was run flawlessly as 235 sailors in 182 boats competed in the various divisions.

Ranging in age from 8 to 18, the young sailors represented yacht and sailing clubs from communities including Annisquam, Beverly, Boston, Cohasset, Duxbury, Gloucester, Hingham, Hull, Manchester, Marblehead, Plymouth, Quincy, Scituate and Weymouth.

Race divisions included International Optimist (five classes), Laser, Laser Radial, Turnabout, Dublin and Club 420.

Because of the varying weather conditions, most of the boats ran in five races over the course of three days.

Peterson was very pleased with how smoothly the regatta championships went and shrugged off the weather as one of those things that makes for more interesting races.

"If the weather was better it would have been a tremendous regatta," Peterson said. "On Tuesday it was

Sewer cost sharing to be back in the spring

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

There is little doubt that the proposal to have the town split the cost of installing sewers in North Cohasset with the 345 homeowners there, has support from town officials and many residents.

But at Monday's continuation of special town meeting — the message was not a rejection of the shared-funding plan but one of holding off until spring. At that time, financing the project could be joined with that for the 440 homes in central Cohasset, the next part of town slated for sewers.

"We are determined to lift 100 percent of the betterment off the neighbors," said Selectman Peter Pratt. He explained the issue is now "a tactical one of timing."

So despite impassioned pleas from North Cohasset homeowners — with a vote of 426 to 370 — Monday's special town meeting failed to give the cost-sharing plan the 2/3 majority required for passage.

Diane Sullivan, 708 Jerusalem Rd., who served as the proponent's spokesman at town meeting this week, said the ball is now in the hands of the sewer commissioners who promised to bring a joint-funding proposal to voters at the annual town meeting next spring.

Although disappointed by Monday's outcome, Sullivan said her group was not surprised by the vote.

"We are no worse off than when we went into the meeting," she said. Sullivan said the importance of setting a precedent with shared-funding for the project didn't seem to get across to central Cohasset residents and those facing Title V repairs.

"We would have oiled the way for them to follow," she said.

The board of selectmen and sewer commissioners are on record backing the proposal which would lighten the financial burden for homeowners in the Straits Pond/Hull Street area, known as North Cohasset, which is scheduled to be hooked up via a sewer main to the Hull treatment plant.

As it stands now, however, those homeowners are faced with paying 100 percent of the cost, amounting to about $870 a year in betterment charges which do not include operating and maintenance costs.

If the article asking for shared-financing had passed at this week's special town meeting, selectmen would have been required to call for a Prop.2-1/2 override within 45 days.

The same article sailed through the special town meeting last March 30, but the 50/50, user-town shared financing plan lost by 34 votes in an override election on April 6. If it had passed, the override would have added about $50 to the annual tax bill of the average home in town.

Since the override defeat, proponents of shared-funding have kept the issue before their fellow residents through letters to newspapers and statements made

Cohasset cool to Greenbush lawsuit

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

As the Hingham gears up for its court battle with the MBTA, residents and neighboring town officials on both sides of the tracks on the rail issue remain ambivalent about the lawsuit.

The complaint challenges the "segmentation" of the Old Colony rail restoration project and strives to bring the Greenbush spur back under federal environmental review which Hingham town officials say offers better protection to their town's historic homes and businesses.

The suit appeals a recent Federal Transit Administration ruling allowing the MBTA to segment the three-pronged project using federal money for the Plymouth and Middleboro lines currently under construction, but building the 17.7-mile, $215 million Greenbush line with state dollars. By eliminating federal funding, Hingham selectmen say the MBTA is attempting to evade tougher federal environmental laws including section 4(f) of the Department of Transportation Act, which prevents any federal transportation project from adversely impacting a protected resource, such as Hingham's National Register Lincoln Historic District.

If the town prevails, the MBTA could be forced to reexamine rail alternatives and or implement mitigation measures to lessen the train's impact — such as the construction of a rail tunnel below historic Hingham Square. State transportation planners have ruled out the tunnel due to its $90 million price tag.

But further down the track in nearby

Cohasset's Week

Register to vote for September primaries

The last day to register to vote or to change party enrollment for the State Primary on Tuesday, Sept. 17, is Wednesday, Aug. 28. The Town Clerk's office will be open from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. on that day. Registration forms are also available at Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The form may be mailed or hand-delivered to the Clerk's office, but must be received or postmarked on or before the deadline.

Absentee ballots for the State Primary are available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting, which may be done during normal office hours, is acceptable for the following reasons only:

absence from the town during the hours the polls are open; physical disability; and religious beliefs preventing voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. This may be accomplished by sending a written signed request by mail or fax to the Town Clerk's office, or by hand-delivery of the request by the voter or other individual.

The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, which ballot — Democrat, Republican or Libertarian — is requested and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such a voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absent voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the Clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter.

Completed ballots should be returned by mail, or may be delivered by an immediate family member, to the Town Clerk's office by Sept. 17 to be counted.

Individuals who are already registered do not need to re-register.

Road resurfacing slated

Road resurfacing is tentatively scheduled to begin Monday, Aug. 19, weather permitting, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said.

It will start at the intersection of Doane and Church Streets and continue down Beechwood Street to #339. Next will be Beechwood Street from Todd Road to Mealys' Pond followed by all of Summer Street and a section of North Main Street from Rocky Lane to the Hingham Line. Dates and locations are subject to change. Residents may experience some delays and should allow extra time for travelling these areas.

Roth's abstention criticized

Diane Sullivan, 708 Jerusalem Rd., who is a spokesman for the citizens' group in North Cohasset that favors having the town share the cost of installing sewers in their area, said her group is upset that selectman Nan Roth abstained from voting on the issue.

"It is not the position of selectmen to abstain from important votes," she said.

Selectmen Merle Brown, Michael Sullivan and Ronnie McMorris voted not to support the article seeking shared-funding at this week's special town meting.

Selectman Peter Pratt supported the article and Roth abstained.

Selectmen unaninmously agree with the 50/50, town-user shared funding plan but the majority feel the proposal should be postponed until the annual town meeting in the spring when financing can be combined with that for the sewer project for central Cohasset.

If Monday's article had passed, selectmen would have had to schedule an override election within 45 days.

This was the scene at the Aug. 12 session of the special town meeting, when nearly 1600 citizens flocked to the Music Circus. This week's meeting drew about half that number.

The best bank in Cohasset is No Mystery

As Cohasset's community bank, we're quite different from other banks in town.

- We have no stockholders...so our customers get all of our attention
- We have no offices outside of town... So Cohasset enjoys the bulk of our loans.
- We have no lengthy review procedure... So your questions are quickly answered.

Planners review DPW garage

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

The Planning Board was given the first opportunity last week to informally review a site plan for the new Cohasset town garage to be built at the town landfill on Cedar Street.

The "step-level" facility will house the town's new Department of Public Works, which combined the tree and park and highway departments.

When completed, the garage will be 191 feet long, 80 feet wide by 66.5 feet high at one end, and 60 feet wide by 71.5 feet high at the other end. The inside of the facility will encompass approximately 14,000 square feet.

Town Meeting allocated $600,000 for the structure, and while the finished product may not be as large as the Garage Study Committee had originally hoped it would be, all town motor vehicles can be housed within the facility, and some expansion could be attained if a future need arose.

The garage's large main doors will open and close electrically, and the building's interior will have an oil-fired, hot-air heating system. Funds for air conditioning were slashed from the budget at the last minute. Above-ground oil storage tanks will be used, and the town will be responsible for the landscaping of the grounds.

Planning Board member Terry Atherton, also a member of the Garage Study Committee, said that $60,000 of the committee's budget has already been allocated for the laying of a water pipe for the finished garage.

A small office, lounge and changing area for employees will be located in the middle section of the building.

• In other business, the board agreed to pass on to the town's Zoning Board of Appeals its approval for plans for front porches to be added to the residences located at 17 Summer St. and 276 North Main St.

• Acting on a request from Kendall Village developers, the board provisionally agreed to allow further construction to be tied into occupancy permits, rather than previously allowed building permits.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore told representatives for Kendall Village they need to submit a written copy of the request so the board can officially vote on the change.

Special Town Meeting is slated for Oct. 28

Selectmen set fall's special town meeting for Monday, Oct. 28 which they say will allow enough time in September for boards and departments to submit warrant articles in time to have the warrant printed.

Marlette puts his stamp on special town meeting

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Monday, the Cohasset town moderator, determined to orchestrate a more harmonious event than last week's opener, got top billing under the big top at Monday's continuation of the special town meeting.

Official Music Circus tickets stamped with "Moderator George L. Marlette Cohasset Town Meeting" and indicating specific seat numbers weren't the only change enacted by Marlette following the stormy session the week before.

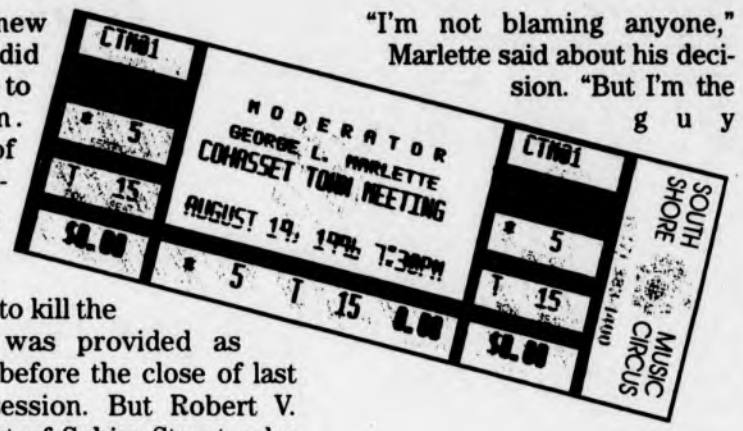
Music Circus attendants directed people to aisles without queques while others showed registered voters to their seats.

And unlike last week, when the start time was delayed due to the long lines waiting to get in, this time as promised, Marlette started the meeting at just a few minutes past 7:30 p.m.

Although half the nearly 1600 who showed up last week stayed home, this week's turnout of 862 was still much larger than the usual numbers who attend town meetings.

A proposed change in the site of the town's new elementary school and a 50/50, user-town shared financing plan for the North Cohasset sewer district topped the town meeting's agenda this week (see related stories).

Last week's threat to reconsider the new school did not come to fruition. Notice of reconsideration of Article 1, asking to kill the project, was provided as required before the close of last week's session. But Robert V. Davenport of Sohier Street, who gave the notice, did not move for reconsideration of the article this week.



The familiar faces of more than a dozen long-time town meeting tellers were noticeably absent from center stage as Marlette swore in a new crew Monday night.

Marlette, who was the focus of a scathing Patriot Ledger editorial on his handling of the Aug. 12 session, discharged the tellers, many of whom worked under his predecessor William Weeks, and hand-picked a new team.

Calling it a tough leadership decision, Marlette said although he is concerned that the dismissed checkers and tellers may take it personally, he had to put the "needs of many in front of the needs of a few."

Marlette explained Tuesday that the important thing making sure voters were processed quickly so he hand picked a new team.

"I'm not blaming anyone," Marlette said about his decision. "But I'm the guy who fell on the sword."

Although Marlette had planned for a secret ballot on the school article at the Aug. 12 session, he initially yielded to the will of town meeting to conduct a hand vote. That vote quickly got out of hand after allegations someone voted with two hands and that some sections weren't being counted. Then, Marlette ordered a secret ballot, a process that took nearly two hours.

At town hall this week, reaction over the discharging of longtime town meeting tellers was harsh. Several town employees accused Marlette of using the tellers as scapegoats for a badly run meeting.

But others noted that individuals should take responsibility for their own actions and that the rowdy behavior last week had nothing to do with tellers or the moderator and everything to do bad manners.

New school to stay put

Monday's continuation of the special town meeting at the Music Circus did not approve a plan, proposed by abutters to the new elementary school, to move it out of their back yards.

Although the proponents of the site change presented detailed plans on view graphs to persuade the audience the move was possible — voters overwhelmingly supported keeping the new $9.9 million school where it is.

Last week's session rejected a proposal by Concerned Cohasset Taxpayers, who are opposed to the school, to stop the project altogether.

Abutters to the proposed new school convinced selectmen to add the site change article to the special town meeting warrant after threatening to collect enough signatures to force another town meeting on the issue.

The Concerned Taxpayers group had already forced the August special town meeting with their petition.

Monday, Andrew Foster, 84 Old Pasture Rd., said moving the school next to the Deer Hill School and therefore closer to Sohier Street would save money because it would cost less to hook up to utilities.

He said the current site, which is more remote, could also present security problems.

Richard O'Brien, 70 Old Pasture Rd., said the abutters' plan would not jeopardize state funding because the same footprint could be used. He explained with the new school moved so it faces the Deer Hill School, the town could save money on snow removal and sanding.

Jill O'Donnell, 72 Old Pasture Rd., said the existing site is so tight that building a school there would be like putting "an aircraft carrier in Cohasset Harbor."

She explained that "campus" sites which contain more than one elementary school are becoming more common. She also said housing all 800 elementary school youngsters in one school was "never an issue."

"These would be two distinct schools," she said. "But near enough to promote interaction."

But Sid Bowen of Boston-based Earl R. Flansburgh + Associates, the architects hired for the project, said there is no better alternative than the planned eight-acre site. He said the same school design — which is one story high on the Old Pasture Road side and two stories high in the front — could not be moved to another location unless the topography of the site is the same. Bowen said the site closer to Deer Hill would require blasting ledge, which is expensive.

"We would have to re-design to move it and in our opinion resubmit to the state," he said.

The state will reimburse the town for 60 percent of the cost of building the new school, including the interest costs on borrowing.

Several residents, who do not abut the new school, lent their support.

Leonora Jenkins, 108 Jerusalem Rd., voiced support for the abutters.

Lynn Eisenhauer, 19 Hobart Lane, said citizens have the right and responsibility to question elected officials and appointed officials and urged voters to take another look at the site.

"It's in the middle of the wetlands," she said.

But Jim Cope, 380 Beechwood St., said town meeting was not the forum to design a school.

"The town selected an excellent firm with a fine reputation. Trying to do (design) it here is folly," he said.

Sewer cost sharing to be back in the spring

at public meetings.

When Concerned Cohasset Taxpayers, a group opposed to the new school, gathered enough signatures to force an August special town meeting – North Cohasset residents seized the opportunity to put the shared-cost plan back before the voters.

Sullivan, Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Rd. and Russ Lennon, 20 Tad Lane, have led the charge for the proponents of going for the financing plan now.

Sullivan reminded town meeting that the same homeowners, who are on Hingham water, are facing a more than doubling of their water bills to pay for a new water treatment plant.

She questioned why the North Cohasset sewer project was ever segmented apart from central Cohasset.

"Why was there a divide and conquer strategy?" she asked. "I'm appealing to you for fairness."

Sewer Commissioner Gary Vanderweil explained the town is under a court order to solve its sewer woes. He said the Straits Pond sewer is part of a inter-municipal agreement with Hull which has pressured Cohasset to expedite the project. Cohasset has been blamed for contributing to the pollution of Straits Pond, an "area of critical environmental concern."

The central Cohasset project has been delayed because of additional testing required in Cohasset Harbor where treated wastewater discharge from that part of town will go.

Vanderweil said when the Straits Pond project was on the drawing board, the commissioners thought that because some residents would face paying for septic system repairs under Title V (the state's environmental code) with no help from the town — then it was "equitable" that those to be sewered not receive financial assistance.

But now, Vanderweil said sewer commissioners are in unanimous agreement that the projects should be funded 50/50 between the homeowners and town. He also explained that there may be relief on the horizon for those facing Title V repairs through low-interest loans, grants and possible further subsidy from the town.

An article before Monday's special town meeting asking to approve a state subsidized loan program for those with Title V repairs was postponed until the fall special town meeting to enable town officials to study the full ramifications of the program.

Sullivan said Tuesday some residents in central Cohasset didn't support their counterparts in North Cohasset because they don't believe the sewer would ever come.

Joan McDonald, 44 Summer St., said at special town meeting that she'd received a letter about nine years ago saying the sewer was coming.

"What ever happened to that plan?" she asked. "Nothing has been done — that's the way things happen in Cohasset."

Assurances from sewer commissioner Henry Rattenbury didn't change her mind.

"I don't believe you, I'm sorry," she said. "How can I believe anything said in this town if nothing ever gets done."

Cohasset cool to Greenbush lawsuit

Cohasset and Scituate, Hingham's lawsuit has little appeal.

"I actually think the suit is without merit," said Scituate Selectman Chairman Donald Brown, who was speaking as a resident — not a representative of the town.

While frustrated with the MBTA and its representatives, Don Brown said he continues to support rail restoration.

"I am and have been in favor of the Greenbush project," he said. "I recognize the Greenbush line is coming and will end in Greenbush and want to do the best possible job for Scituate, mitigating the impacts. I believe the board of selectmen is attempting to do that as well."

In Cohasset, the Greenbush restoration project has taken a back seat to a controversial new school and sewer project, recently hashed out in the largest town meeting that town has ever seen.

In fact, in Cohasset's most recent dealings with state transportation planners, both the town and citizen mitigation committees and the board of selectmen have endorsed a plan to have the proposed Route 3A rail station moved to Cohasset Village as a way to boost local business.

"If the train comes through, I think it would be a good move to put the station in the center of town," said Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown.

While he would not comment directly on Hingham's legal challenge against the 'T', Brown said his community has no plans to follow suit.

Personally, Merle Brown said he does not support the project because he feels it is too costly and will serve too few commuters.

According to Brown, Cohasset selectmen will address the Greenbush issue at their next meeting on Aug. 26. Once split 3 to 2 against the project, Brown said the two newest selectmen elected this spring will be polled to establish where the board now sits on the rail issue.

In Hingham, reactions to the suit have varied from those who favor rail restoration and are angered by the use of their tax dollars to block what they say is a necessary project, to staunch train opponents who feel the lawsuit isn't enough to fight the Greenbush line and a few in between.

"I definitely think more should be done," said Nancy Buckley, founder of the anti-rail Coastal Coalition.

"We support the town's position to file this suit, and we're happy they did, but there are a number of ways this can turn out. We can lose and the "T" will bring the train through at grade or we can win and the "T' will be forced to build a tunnel," she said. Either way, brings the train, its noise, vibrations and dangerous grade crossings, Buckley said.

Even with a short tunnel below Hingham Square to protect the historic district, Buckley noted "there will still be 38 grade crossings on the 17-mile line, along with all the noise, safety, and traffic problems they pose."

"There is so much more to this than the elimination of five grade crossings and it's frustrating after 2-1/2 years of leading this fight and being part of a group that has helped educate the South Shore on this to feel that now, we're back to square one," Buckley said.

Buckley, and other rail opponents have pressed the town to fight the Greenbush line not only legally but on other fronts as well, including hiring a public relations firm to help educate and inform residents throughout the state about the project and pursuing the issue with the Inspector General whose duties include the prevention of government waste and the misuse of public funds.

Buckley is also critical of putting all of the town's eggs in one basket and presenting the case as one designed to protect historic buildings and districts only.

"This is a quality of life issue for the entire community and all communities along the line," she said.

Rail supporter Ross Hall, a member of the pro-train group Back on Track, said while he was not surprised about the suit and did not resent the appropriation to launch it, he would prefer the money be spent elsewhere.

"The town can absorb the $100,000 not used for schools or something else, but I regret that," Hall said.

"I'm sorry it had to come to this," he added. Hall also regrets the abandonment of the consensus support for a rail tunnel, reached long before the lawsuit that could bring that alternative back to the table, was planned.

Since the decision to restore the Greenbush line was made last November, Back on Track has faded into the background, but is eyeing the progress of the project carefully, he said.

"We're resting from our labors. We feel we've landed our fish and we struggled for it. The issue is decided and we feel pleased by the nature of that decision. It's going to happen, and I'm looking forward to it," he said.

As to how successful the lawsuit will be, Hall said only that he was sure the federal authorities that allowed the project to be "segmented" knew what they were doing.

"I'm sure the FTA knew some sparks were going to fly but I hope the suit does not prevail," he said.

MBTA officials are hoping the same thing. According to MBTA spokesperson Brian Pedro, MBTA attorneys feel confident the FTA's decision will be upheld. With construction on the line at least a year away, the MBTA does not expect legal challenge to delay the project.

Long expected Hingham vs. Greenbush lawsuit launched

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

As negotiations to mitigate the impact of Greenbush rail restoration move forward, Hingham — in an attempt to strengthen its anti-rail position and level the playing field — filed suit against the MBTA in federal district court last week.

Months in the planning, the anti-segmentation law suit, town officials say, has been launched to bring the Greenbush project back under federal environmental review offering better protection for the town's historic homes and businesses.

"Let there be no doubt of the resolve of this board to honor the trust that Hingham places with us to protect our environment, our businesses and our citizens," said Hingham Selectman Martin Crane.

The law suit appeals a recent Federal Transit Administration (FTA) decision which allowed the MBTA to "segment" the three-pronged Old Colony Rail Restoration project — using federal money for the Plymouth and Middleboro lines currently under construction, but building the 17.7-mile, $215 million Greenbush line with state dollars.

By eliminating federal funding selectmen say the MBTA is attempting to evade tougher federal environmental laws including section 4(f) of the Department of Transportation Act, which prevents any federal transportation project from adversely impacting a protected resource, such as Hingham's National Register Lincoln Historic District.

Under section 4(f), the MBTA would be forced to look at all prudent and feasible alternatives to rail restoration and if there are none, must make every effort to mitigate any adverse impacts on that protected resource, said Hingham's Greenbush coordinator and former Hingham Historical Commission chairman Alexander Macmillan.

While the town continues to discuss mitigation with MBTA project planners under the appropriate state environmental laws, Macmillan has long said the federal laws are far more stringent and offer Hingham better protections.

Macmillan, who is also a member of the state appointed Citizen's Advisory Committee reviewing the project, maintains that the MBTA believes the federal laws so strict that it has taken the extraordinary step of declining federal funding to evade them.

This evasion of federal environmental laws and whether or not it is legal, is what the suit is questioning, Macmillan said.

"This is not about any particular alternative or the merits of the project whatsoever. It is whether they (MBTA) can do what they did to avoid this more stringent review," he said, adding "it seems pretty clear. If this isn't segmentation, what is?"

But MBTA officials, while still reviewing the suit, interpret segmentation in a different way. MBTA spokesperson Brian Pedro said the segmentation case sticks only if there were plans to break up the Greenbush line itself, by funding one segment from Braintree to Hingham federally and using state money for the line from Hingham to Scituate, for example.

Pedro also maintained that the reason for declining federal funding was not to evade federal environmental laws but because it was determined that the most efficient use of that money was not on that section of the line. Pedro also asserted that when it comes to environmental review, state laws are just as stringent as the federal laws and that the FTA agreed with the MBTA on that point by allowing Greenbush to be built with state money.

Through the 1994 special town meeting, Hingham voters authorized the town to appropriate $100,000 to deal with, and fight if necessary the return of rail service through Hingham. Washington D.C. attorney Andrea Ferster, an expert in historic preservation law, has been hired to represent the town in its suit.

Ferster said she feels strongly that the town will prevail in this action.

"There are a number of cases that I think are similar enough that are very useful in supporting Hingham's position that what the MBTA has done is illegal," she said.

Train mitigation committee moves along

By BRIAN SURETTE
Special to the Mariner

The Citizen's Mitigation Committee for the restoration of the Old Colony Railroad's Greenbush line held a third public meeting last week in an effort to solicit comments and concerns from Cohasset residents pertaining to the commuter rail's proposed 1999 late-fall opening.

Members of the committee also discussed initial draft reports (each member is writing a specific report to cover potential mitigation aspects of the commuter rail), and scheduled two additional meetings prior to turning over their finished report to Cohasset's "staff" Railroad Mitigation Committee, made up of town officials.

Unfortunately, due to the month of August being a vacation month for many residents and this particular train hearing being held between two highly charged Town Meeting sessions, the citizen's committee has been hard pressed to have many residents in attendance. This meeting was no exception. A total of 22 residents have attended the three public hearings, but only one came for the third session.

Committee member John Rafferty, in discussing his two draft reports (water resource protection and train station location), appeared to assess the feeling of committee members.

"The good thing about this committee is that we have both pro and anti-train people on this board. But we're not getting the full message from Cohasset citizens, because they're just not coming (to meetings)," he said.

When asked by committee members if he had any thoughts about the train running through Cohasset, resident Robert V. Davenport voiced concern over the proposed Cohasset Village station stop.

Saying storefront doors open onto South Main Street and not onto where the station location would actually be, Davenport said many downtown shop owners have adopted an "if you built it they will come" type of philosophy regarding the train and that, he believes, couldn't be further from the truth.

Davenport, who favors the MBTA's original Route 3A station location, feels commuters, either running to catch a morning train or rushing home to an evening's dinner, will not greatly increase the financial coffers of area stores. Most train travelers will continue to make purchases in Boston and conduct local business on weekends.

"The business people in Cohasset Center have a lot of dreams," he stated.

In discussing their thoughts for a final report to be presented to the Railroad Mitigation Committee, the citizen's committee was in agreement that it should be as brief as possible. Committee members expect their finished report to be 18 to 20 pages long.

A date of Sept. 5 was set for all draft reports to be completed and turned in, and a public hearing is scheduled for Thursday, Sept. 12, for final discussion of the report.

Road closing is clarified

Police closed a section of Jerusalem Road between Atlantic Avenue and Forest Street to non-resident traffic for about an hour on Saturday night due to a fireworks display that was attracting a crowd.

The Roy family was celebrating John Roy's 80th birthday with fireworks over the water and many other families in the area planned parties to enjoy the show, police said.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said all residents and their guests were allowed through.

Noonan said the decision to close the road was based on public safety concerns.

Ed Teague's Eye on Congress New Jobs

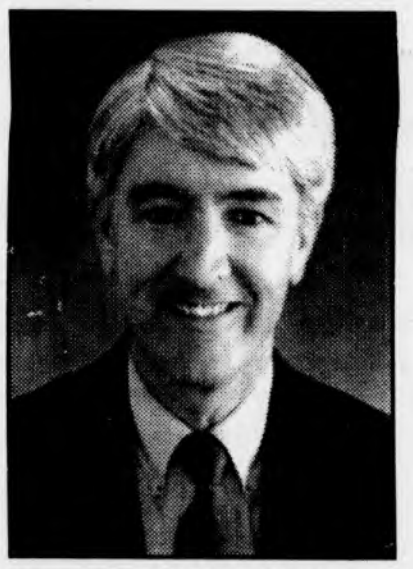
HYANNIS Ma -- As the campaign for the 10th District's open Congressional seat heats up, one question surfaces again and again: How do the candidates propose to create new jobs in Massachusetts? So far, the only candidate to have even introduced a plan to create jobs is Ed Teague.

Ed Teague's Ten Point Plan for the Cape and South Shore makes a strong case for his detailed program of regional economic revitalization. And with economic issues playing a major role in the election, it is surprising that Ed Teague is the only candidate addressing the problem. "Job growth continues to be the key to our continued economic reform," Teague said.

Teague's plan focuses first on the jobs lost with the closings of the Fore River Shipyard and Weymouth Naval Air Station. "We have a real debt to the workers who helped us win the Cold War," Teague said. "And we need to help undo the economic damage caused by these shut downs."

His plan also proposes a move to take advantage of the growing national demand for shellfish by eliminating burdensome regulatory which currently prohibit the development of aquaculture in local water.

Finally, Teague targets the bureaucratic regulations that stifle the growth and productivity of small business. He added he would require risk assessment and cost-benefit analysis when writing future regulations.



Congressional Candidate Ed Teague

With nearly three out of four new jobs created by small business, the National Federation of Independent Business was quick to lend their support to Teague's Jobs Initiative. The business group, which has 1411 members in the district, is excited by Teague's proposals and expects his ideas to positively impact the region's economy.

"We have one of the best educated workforces in the country," Teague said. "There's no reason we can't secure local economic growth well into the 21st Century."

"The right to work and prosper is encompassed in the American Dream," Teague continued. "By opening up the area to growing businesses and job creation, we will go a long way toward restoring that dream to Massachusetts workers."

Nathan Maynard heads to France for two-year mission

Nathan Maynard, 19, son of Hermon and Pat McCarthy Maynard is leaving on a two-year mission in France for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. His parents, both born and raised in Cohasset, now live in Antrim, New Hampshire. Nathan will interrupt his engineering course at Tufts University to serve this calling. He is presently at the training center in Provo, Utah in preparation for his assignment. Young Mormons serve missions voluntarily and without financial reimbursement.

Kristin Grassie certainly did herself proud during her junior year at Wake Forest College. She made the dean's list for the entire year! This fall when she returns as a senior, she will be heading the rush for all of the sororities, a hard job indeed, but a fun one. Hope you will fill us in on all of your "doings" at Wake Forest, Kristin, and that you have a wonderful year.

If you are a Cohasset High School alumni, you are invited to participate in this event — a flag relay at the new alumni field opening day, Sunday, Sept. 8. Join your fellow alumni! So far, the committee has identified graduates dating back to the 1950s, but there is no limit. The plan is for each present and past class to carry the commemorative flag partially around the new track prior to the flag raising.

Pre-registration is required. Class signs may be obtained at the field at 3:15 p.m., with the ceremony starting at 4 p.m. Be sure to be part of the festivities, including the flag raising and illumination. Refreshments will be served.

Speaking of alumni, Sandra Hitt was in town for a brief visit recently. Sandra and her family all say hello. Her mom, Florence Hitt, is living in Washington. In fact, she would love to hear from you at: 2275 Chambers Lake Dr., Lacey, Wash. 98503.

Hats off to Larissa Huskins, who will be a junior at Holy Cross this fall. Larissa, who made the dean's list, is majoring in economics. Good work (and we do mean work)!

Aug. 27 is a very big day for two of Cohasset's finest gents — Frank Wheelwright and Lot Bates. They will be 80 years young on that day, and will have super celebrations we're sure. Hopefully Lot and Frank will let us know all about it! In any case, be sure to say big birthday wishes when you see both of them.

Don't forget to make plans for the Christine Burke Scholarship Fund clambake, to be held Sept. 7 at Sandy Beach. The event promises to be one of the yummiest this summer. Call 383-9657 for more information. You'll be glad you did.

In case you haven't heard about it yet, the Cohasset Swim Center is holding a raffle for a super prize — free membership for next year! Isn't that a great idea? They are trying to raise money to make a kiddy pool for the real babies who go there. The spot is all picked out, and everyone is really excited. All that's needed now is to raise the money. Call the center to find out all the details. The drawing will be on Labor Day weekend, and the number to call about the raffle is 383-9463.

We want to be sure to give a round of applause to the Cohasset Swim Team — an undefeated season is an awesome thing to accomplish, and you all did it with great style!

One more request — remember the Food Pantry! There is a need for the following items: toothpaste, personal soap, facial tissue, detergents, canned vegetables, white sugar, minute rice, cereals, mayonnaise, canned fruit, salad dressing, pasta sauce, canned vegetables and diapers.

Don't forget that the last carillon concert of the summer is planned for this Sunday, Aug. 25. The carillonneur will be Sally Slade Warner, bell ringer of St. Stephen's Church and Phillips Academy in Andover. People come from all over to hear the concerts, and we are lucky to have such a fine place to hear such lovely music.

Be sure to visit the new Rockland Trust Bank, which opened this week. They want all of us to take a peek and fill out an entry blank for a drawing for a clambake in your own backyard.

Happy birthday greetings go to Margaux Yeager this week. She turned Sweet 16!

It sure has been fun for Hap and Leah Pompeo lately. They have had their daughter, Tara, her husband, Rich, and their granddaughter, Sage, home before they depart for Hawaii, where they will be working for six months. Hap and Leah will miss them like mad when they leave, but what a great place to visit — Tara's sisters are already making their plans!

We were saddened to learn that Parker Malley passed away a few weeks ago. He was 91 years old, and what a great guy he was! We'll bet most people from Cohasset have at least one story to tell about him and his kindness to others, his nice manner and his love of family and friends. We could go on and on! Our thoughts are with his family at this time.

Happy birthday greetings go to Norman Swain. We hope his day is a happy one indeed.

That's the news for this week. We hope you will call with yours. Summer is almost over, and surely you have one story to tell us! Give me a call, please, at 383-0560.

Unfair dismissal

Reeling from bad reviews following the first session of town meeting last week, Town Moderator George Marlette discharged a team of long-standing, hard-working tellers and checkers and hired a new team for Monday night.

Unfortunately and understandably, many of those dismissed are deeply hurt by our moderator's actions.

The new group, sworn in at Monday's town meeting, performed their duties efficiently.

But the fact is, the crowd was about half the size of last week's and much more educated about the venue.

Most of us have visited the Music Circus over the years to see shows featuring rock 'n roll stars , country and western performers or comedians. Others have watched their children graduate from high school under the big top.

But we've never been to town meeting there before. And with town meetings, there is no dress rehearsal.

The two sessions, which focused on emotionally-charged issues, drew unprecedented turnouts. We are appreciative that South Shore Playhouse Associates was able to pitch in this summer by donating use of the Music Circus for these historic special town meetings, which would have overwhelmed the high school gym.

We understand that Mr. Marlette had to take preventative action on several fronts to avoid a repeat fiasco. But we doubt any team of tellers and checkers could have handled last week's chaos effectively considering the historic numbers in a highly-charged environment, in an unfamiliar setting for a town meeting.

This week's session did go smoothly.

But our long-time, trusted team of tellers and checkers, who sat this one out, should hold their heads high. They have served the town well over the years and gave their best effort last week under very difficult and confusing circumstances.

The town owes each and every one of them a debt of gratitude. We sincerely hope this experience will not dissuade them from ever getting involved again.

About last week, Mr. Marlette says, "I'm not blaming anyone. I'm the guy who fell on the sword."

While this may be true — the perception is, the tellers and checkers are the scapegoats for the poorly run session.

Reconciliation and renewal urged

To the Editor:

The long, arduous and contentious year leading up to this present Town Meeting has been the most painful and hurtful in the history of this town we love. Whether we have just moved to Cohasset or our families have been here for generations, we are living on a tiny point of land on our wonderful planet that many of us consider the most beautiful and bucolic in the entire United States.

Sadly, despite our most serene of surroundings, the past year has seen our citizens descend to the depths of cynicism, mistrust and suspicion among families, neighbors and both elected and appointed officials who lead our community.

We have lost a sense of community, a sense of shared values, and perhaps most importantly, a sense of trust and optimism for the future of our town.

I speak as a resident of Cohasset for only 11 years, as one who has come to deeply respect the rich ethnic diversity of our town, although this is too often forgotten both within and outside our borders.

We consist of people who make their living on the sea as fishermen, those who make their living with their hands, those who work in both the visual and performing arts fields, and of those who are artisans, judges, lawyers, teachers, doctors and professionals in a wide range of fields.

Please, my fellow townsmen, in the words of that great Biblical prophet Isaiah: "Come, let us reason together."

Let us now put aside our political, philosophical, economic and personal differences to effect a renewal of the spirit of goodwill, caring, trust, hope and sharing for the benefit of all.

We are not all blessed with the same intellectual gifts, economic and financial blessings, educational experience or ethnic heritage, but we have one most important thing in common.

Very simply, we are all human beings searching for a sense of inner peace, contentment and happiness for ourselves and our loved ones. We want success for ourselves and our children, remembering that success is a journey and not a destination.

My fellow citizens, to renew our commitment to each other, re-establish common decency and trust among us and aid us in healing the wounds of division in our town, I call upon our Board of Selectmen, School Committee and Advisory Committee to jointly and officially designate and declare a "Cohasset Weekend of Reconciliation and Renewal."

Activities on such a weekend might include "A Day of Prayer and Reconciliation" in our houses of worship, a dance for young and old on the main street in the village, neighborhood cookouts, greetings of friendship to those we meet as we go about our errands on Saturday, an ethnic food festival on the Common with music and song or an old-fashioned sing-a-long to celebrate our rich and diverse heritage.

We must resolve to restore civility in our public discourse by lowering our voices, by respecting one another's viewpoints, by listening and hearing what others are saying, and by refraining from assuming the worst of motives in others, in order to move forward together for a better future for ourselves, our children and our grandchildren.

In the words of the greatest of all American presidents, Abraham Lincoln, delivered at the close of his second inaugural address: "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive to finish the work we are in. . ."

And then, friends and neighbors, let us move ahead together with lowered voices, civility and respect for others' viewpoints toward a better and more peaceful future together, remembering in our hearts that flashing light off our shores for the past 136 years — flashing 1-4-3 — I love you!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Common sense is lacking

(The following letter was sent to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen. The Cohasset Mariner obtained a copy from the board's correspondence.)

Selectmen:

I worked at the Hall for many years and also worked the elections, and I have never seen such a disgraceful display of town government as I saw last night (Aug. 12).

You are all so worried about our young people! What about our young men and women who have to move from this town because they cannot afford to live here?

State of the art buildings do not make for a good education. My son attended St. Paul School in Hingham for nine years and ate at his desk every school day. This had nothing to do with good study habits and discipline. Common sense is lacking here. You are forcing young and old out of this town. I hope it's worth it, but I rather doubt it.

As long as we're throwing caution to the winds and we seem to have plenty of money, maybe we could spend a little on a new "No U Turn" sign for in front of Lilac House Antiques at 26 South Main St. That also is a disgrace to the town.

(I have been a resident of the town for 32 years.)

School architect choice supported

To the Editor:

Although I was a supporter of Article 6 (to relocate the new school facing the existing Deer Hill School), I wish to disassociate myself from one of the charges by proponent Andrew Foster. He criticized the School Facilities Committee for selecting an architect without competitive bidding.

Professional services, whether architectural, engineering, accounting or medical, should not be selected on the basis of the lowest quoted price but by assessment of reputation for integrity and competence, and of the anticipated quality of service. The real cost is not the fee for the service, but the cost of implementing the recommendations of the professional. We can't afford to use less than the best doctor (or architect) that can be found.

Congratulations to Moderator George Marlette for realizing that voters, like children, appreciate having limits set and firmly enforced. A sense of order provides a sense of security. Of course, it is also necessary to exhibit kindness, courtesy and patience for the harmless irrelevancies of clueless speakers, while being severe with the uncivil and destructive.

Unfortunately for both moderator and attendees, there seems to be no correlation between common sense and loquacity. But, after all, democracy is the process of counting heads without any regard for what is in them.

Delahunt cites health care, middle class as major issues

By SCOTT DALTON
Cohasset Mariner

The Norfolk County District Attorney and congressional candidate is crisscrossing the 10th District this month as the battle to succeed outgoing U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds continues to heat up.

Working out of a vacation house in Chatham last week, William Delahunt met with Cape Cod Community Newspapers to discuss various issues surrounding the race.

He counts health care, the environment and the restoration of the middle class as central planks in his campaign platform and said the time has come to move in a new direction.

"Health care is the dominating issue," he said. "But you have to go back to what is happening to the middle class; it's disappearing. We end up with a nation of haves and have nots where the wealth is totally unequal...we have to chart a different course."

Delahunt is a self-proclaimed "union guy" who would like to see the hours of the work week reduced and benefits increased, saying corporations can afford to pay for it.

The Boston Globe last weekend questioned his middle class mantra, saying Delahunt had real estate worth more than $800,000 and was at one time worth close to $2 million.

Born and raised in Quincy, Delahunt has served 20 years as Norfolk County's district attorney, building a record that he said speaks well of him and is second to no one. During his 1994 campaign for the post, he announced that he would not seek re-election.

The presumed front-runner in the Democratic race to succeed Studds, Delahunt has faced numerous accusations during the campaign. Charges surrounding the use of campaign funds and the reluctance of Delahunt to release income tax information have become fodder for debate as the Sept. 17 state primary looms. His three fellow Democratic candidates have called on him to follow their lead and release tax return information, but Delahunt has refused, calling it an issue of privacy.

"For a fleeting moment, I was worth a million dollars. I assure you I'm not now," he said. "Is this campaign about my income tax returns or is it about the issues I discussed?...My gross income is less than some in this race and more than others."

The Boston Globe reported that Delahunt estimated his net worth at $1.83 million in cash and land holdings before his divorce in 1991. Delahunt said that the question about tax returns merely clouds the important questions in the race to succeed Studds.

The Norfolk District Attorney said he has complied with all state requirements on releasing financial information and accounting for the more than $27,000 he spent from 1993 through 1995 on 400 food and drink bills.

"I don't come from a background of personal wealth and I need to establish relationships," he said. "My technique and my approach has been to meet as many people as I could and I did that in full compliance with the structure that exists. Those are the rules and I play by them."

Questions about campaign spending have dogged his race for months. Two phone calls, one from a vacation resort in Jamaica and another from Middlebury College in Vermont, received heightened scrutiny after they were charged to his campaign fund. Delahunt said in both cases, the calls concerned legitimate, fund-raising issues.

"Communication is important in terms of success to a specific fund-raising event," he said, adding that the call from Jamaica concerned a Milton fund-raiser and the Vermont call involved fellow graduates and supporters at Middlebury.

"You have a process now where you have fewer and fewer candidates running for office. The middle class can't afford to run for office," he said, listing Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, Gov. William Weld and Sen. John Kerry as examples of wealthy politicians. He also included fellow Democratic congressional contender Ian Bowles. "I mention that with no degradation to Ian, but he comes from a different social strata."

Choosing to focus on specific issues, Delahunt said he is prepared to compare his record to any of the Democratic or Republican challengers. Although he said his long-term commitment to the environment does not often manifest itself in his work as a district attorney, Delahunt said he has been a leader in his community in acquiring open space. He said he considers environmental questions matters of public health and decried a "litany of acts" proposed by the Republican-dominated Congress. He also attacked State Rep. Ed Teague, R-Yarmouth, who is seeking the Republican slot on the congressional ballot.

"Mr. Teague has the second worst record on the environment," he said. "He's not the Cape Cod candidate, he's the major corporation (and) business candidate. He's not the Cape Cod candidate. Not if the environment is a paramount issue to the people on Cape Cod."

Delahunt said he would welcome an opportunity to debate Teague should they both succeed in their efforts to capture their respective party's vote.

In terms of civil rights, a field in which outgoing Studds is renowned, Delahunt said he will be long remembered for his work as a district attorney.

"Whether it's gay rights or anti-Semitism, I'd put my record up against anyone, including Congressman Studds, with all due respect," he said, adding that his commitment to domestic violence issues is also strong. "When it comes to civil rights and human rights, I think it's one thing passing laws and it's another changing attitudes. It's not just someone's personal safety being assured; they should feel welcome."

Delahunt said he would favor reducing the regular work week to 36 hours or perhaps 32 hours to allow more time for what he called "family values." He said he considers himself a "union guy" in the tradition of his grandfather, who was a leader of the 1919 Boston Police Officer strike.

"If we talk about family values and we have to work 60 or 70 hours a week and both parents work, when is there time for family values?" he asked. "Let's increase the benefit for the rest of us. I bet the major corporations could afford it. Let's shift the public policy to what we can do to improve living standards for the workers."

He said he favors strengthening the collective bargaining laws, noting that large corporations with extensive legal staffs can sometimes draw out matters for five years or more.

While the 10th Congressional district is a strange creature, running from the union city of Quincy, through the South Shore and out to the Cape, Delahunt said he prefers to concentrate on the similarities, not the differences, of communities in the region.

"None of us live in vacuums," he said. "I was at a bingo game last night at St. Pius' in Yarmouth and I was meeting people (originally) from Randolph, Dedham, Canton and Weymouth," he said. "There's much that binds us really...I think there is more in common than separates us. This is a coastal district. Quincy has 26 miles of coastline."

He added that the fishing industry problems that currently plague the Cape are not solely germane to this side of the canal. "I've met some folks in Marshfield, lobstermen, who share many of the same concerns."

Beyond the ocean, Delahunt said the 10th District also shares similar demographics and fears concerning national issues such as health care.

He said there are many cases of rising costs coupled with stagnant insurance benefits and that the middle class is the group that suffers.

He said he favors allowing people to chose between health care options, but added that the concept of universal health care should be the point from which all other reform follows.

Diversify it yourself

Create and manage your own 'bearproof' portfolio

Edited by Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

Were you one of the investors who threw in the towel during the recent market downturn? Facing down what looks like a bear market can be frightening indeed, despite listening to endless diatribes in the financial press about the virtues of being a long-term investor.

How can you keep your head when investors around you are losing theirs? By assembling a portfolio with modest volatility. That way, you can stand pat during the severest of bear markets.

For example, a portfolio split equally between common stocks and money market funds is only half as vo as the stock m ket. Should stoc prices tumble b 40 percent, th value of you portfolio will fa by only 20 pe cent.

But of co this type of portfolio comes saddled with its own limitations. The problem with allocating your assets this way is you reduce potential returns significantly. In this instance, your long-run annual average return potential is only about 7.5 percent. Alas, we wish you could have everything — with this portfolio, you have to sacrifice some return for reduced volatility.

But there's hope. It may seem impossible to trim volatility and earn double-digit returns. But by building a diversified mutual fund portfolio containing many different categories of assets, you can reduce volatility without sacrificing a fat chunk of your return. Call it the All-Weather Portfolio.

It works by spreading capital equally across seven categories of assets: blue-chip stocks, small-cap stocks, international equities, domestic bonds, international bonds, gold, and money markets. The chart accompanying this article neatly illustrates the annual returns this portfolio would have earned during the past 22 years, as well as those of the S&P 500 index. We collated this data for the year ended 1994, the latest and best data available for these funds.

Guess what? After more than two decades, an investor's $10,000 initial investment would have grown to $174,700, a 13.9 percent annual return. An equivalent investment in the S&P 500 would have grown to $112,300, or 11.6 percent annually. Even more important, you would have dodged every bear market along the way. Although stocks declined by as much as 26.5 percent in 1974, the largest annual decline in the All-Weather Portfolio was a very modest 3.7 percent.

Seasoned investors already know that runaway inflation drives interest rates up and bond prices down. But runaway inflation also drives the price of gold higher. We've offset losses in the bond market by gains in gold, using a gold fund that the experts highly recommended. Similarly, returns among the other categories of assets in the portfolio are less than perfectly correlated with one another. That levels the peaks and valleys in the portfolio's value.

But shouldn't lower-risk portfolios provide diminished returns? Students of capital-market theory would say that portfolio risk and return are inextricably linked— the higher the risk, the higher the returns. So, does our strategy fly in the face of modern investment theory? Nope.

Since the All-Weather ortfolio is more iciently diverfied than a ortfolio conning a handful lomestic large-cap stocks — such as the S&P 500 index — it comes much closer to the portfolio described by efficient-market theory. In short, the All-Weather Portfolio contains a better balance between investment return and non-diversifiable risk. It works because it conforms more closely to modern capital-market and portfolio-management theory.

How can you assemble your own version of this portfolio? Buy no-load mutual funds that invest in each category of asset contained in the All-Weather Portfolio. With mutual funds' relatively low minimum investment requirements, an investor can create a portfolio with around $20,000. Choose mutual funds that stay fully invested at all times, and those that have low expense ratios. Use index funds whenever possible.

The same portfolio we show here had a recent beta of 0.38, versus the market's beta of 1.00; this means the funds' volatility was 62 percent below the overall market's. At that point in time, the portfolio had a yield of 3.1 percent, annual expenses equal to a measly 0.7 percent, and annual returns that potentially could run 11 to 12 percent on average over the longer run.

Managing the portfolio won't leave you chewing your pencil eraser late into the night. Set initial allocations, then rebalance them one to four times a year. Rebalancing keeps the portfolio highly diversified; it also forces you to sell funds in categories that have appreciated and add to those in categories that have fallen. In other words, you buy low and sell high.

This portfolio combines all the elements required for long-term investment success: Its holdings are diversified, are oriented toward the long-term, and strike a reasonable balance between risk and return. It automatically requires that you buy low and sell high. Its costs are moderate and it's simple to maintain. So if you're afraid of the stock market, get constantly stiffed by sour tips from your broker, and always get stuck buying at market tops and selling at market bottoms, the All-Weather Portfolio is just what you need.

Henry Roth saves the day!

Twelve-year-old earns Sportsmanship Award by helping out fellow sailor

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Twelve-year-old sailor Henry Roth of Cohasset will never be compared to Vince Lombardi when it comes to his attitude about winning.

In fact, a motto for the three-sport athlete at Derby Academy in Hingham could be: Winning isn't everything, it's the only thing — providing your competitor has a working rudder.

Roth, you see, performed a tremendous act of sportsmanship as he prepared for the first day of competition in the Mass Bay Sailing 1996 BayBank Junior Championships in Cohasset last Tuesday.

It's the type of feat Gordon Lightfoot writes songs about. There's "The Wreck of the Edmund Fitzgerald" and maybe someday, "The Legend of Henry Roth."

Roth, a member of the Cohasset Yacht Club who has been sailing for five years, was getting ready to head out to the start of the Laser Radial races. It was his first time ever competing in that division.

While getting his boat ready, Roth accidently lost hold of his tiller and fell into the water, sinking to the bottom.

Rather than bellyache that he was without an important part of his boat just minutes before the start of what he knew would be a tough series of races, Roth simply ripped off his shirt and dove into the water, retrieving the tiller.

But Roth wasn't done fishing for lost sailboat equipment just yet.

As Roth shivered in the cold, damp wind, a fellow competitor had the same mishap with his rudder. Unlike Roth, however, he paced the dock, wondering just what to do. Diving into the chilly water wasn't at the top of his list of possible options.

Roth simply shrugged, dove back into the drink and retrieved the rudder.

"I was already wet so I dove down and got it," he said, unimpressed with his act. "He was thankful."

And well Ross' competitor should have been. If not for the unselfish act, he may have eventually had to take the plunge on his own.

That show of good will towards his fellow competitor unanimously earned Roth the regatta's Sportsmanship Trophy. Roth heard whispers beforehand that he may be the one to snag the award, but he didn't take them seriously.

"I was really surprised," Roth said. "My friends told me I might win, but I was still surprised I did."

The regatta committee decide before the competition that it would sit down at the end and come up with a winner. Word was sent out to all workers and volunteers to keep their eyes and ears peeled to any news they heard of any feats that could possibly be considered.

The event's co-chairman, Chuck Peterson, said he didn't hear of Roth's opening-day plunge until the final day. When Peterson and the rest of the committee heard what Roth did for the other racer, the decision was made.

"That kind of made it a unanimous choice for the Roth kid," Peterson said. "There was absolutely no doubt about it."

Peterson believes the name Henry Roth will live on for years to come in the seaside community. The story will be told and re-told, each with a bit of poetic license thrown in by the storyteller to spice it up. By the time the final version comes out, Roth will be standing along Paul Bunyan and Lightfoot will be kicking around some lyrics for a "Best of" album.

Fifty years from now one of the kids who competed in the regatta will tell his grandchildren about the great Henry Roth.

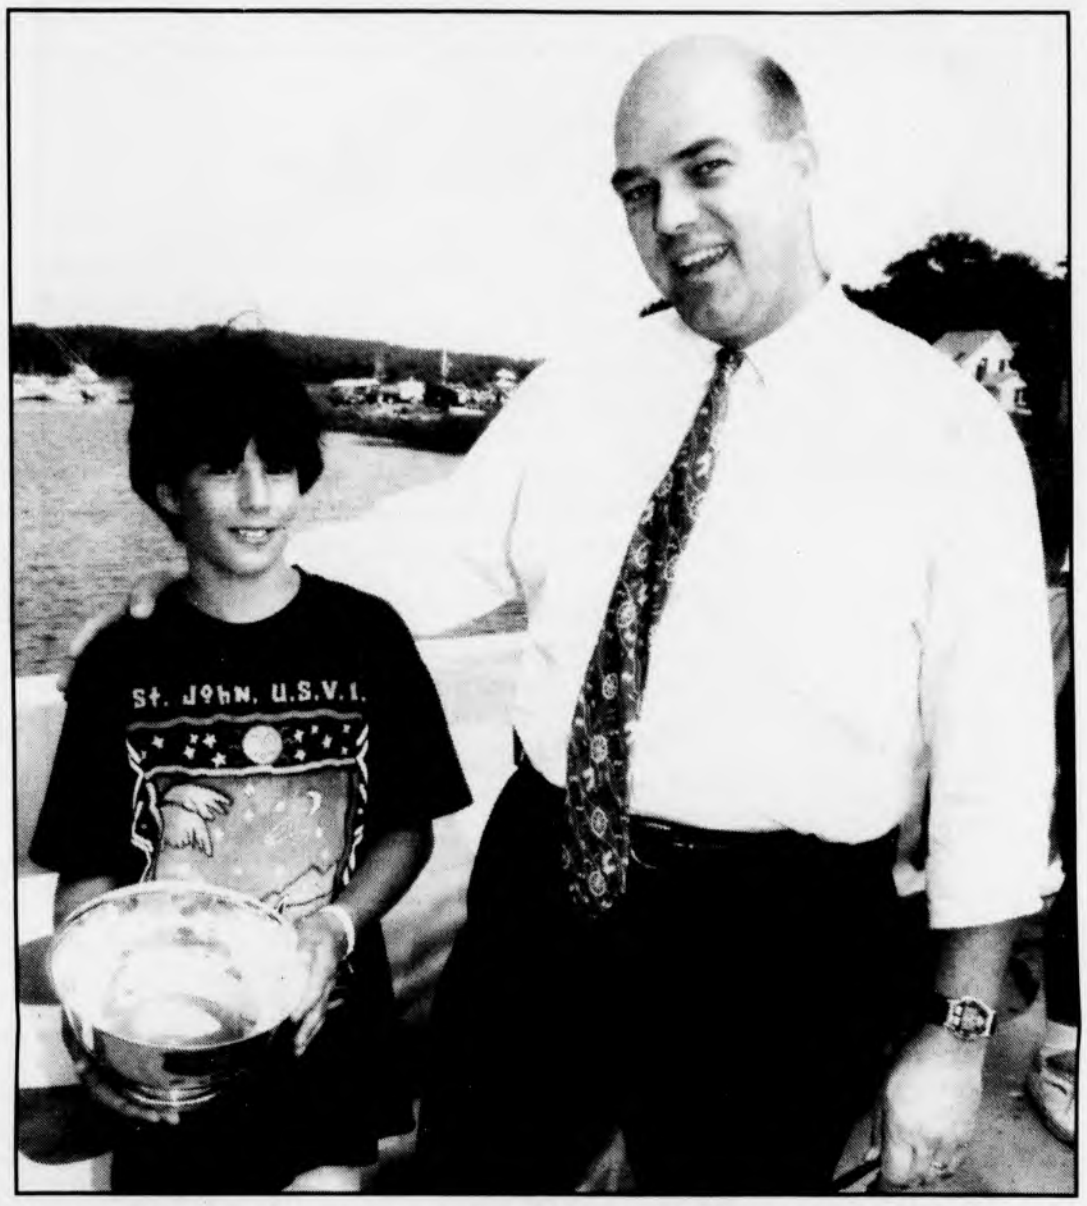
There he was, a mile from shore, bucking 10-foot waves and harsh, cold winds. Through the biting wind Roth spied another boat in distress. Not fearing for his own safety, Roth dove into the rough waters and powered his body through the water until he reached the other boat.

Roth noticed it was taking on water and quickly threw the boater the only life jacket and dragged him back to his own boat as they both watched the injured vessel disappear from view forever.

Still soaked to the bone, Roth caught up to the field and went on to win the Laser Radial division of the championships.

By the time the story reaches these dramatic proportions, few of us will be around to dispute it, much less remember the events. But that's O.K. It's legends and tall tales that make for good bedtime stories for young aspiring sailors.

They'll remember The Legend of Henry Roth.



Henry Roth, 12, of Cohasset, shows off his Sportsmanship Trophy during the awards ceremony for the Mass Bay Sailing 1996 BayBank Junior Championships. A member of the Cohasset Yacht Club, Roth dove into the water and retrieved the rudder of a fellow competitor, just prior to the start of the first day of racing. Congratulating Roth is Peter Kortright, regional president of BayBank.

Recreation soccer registration

The final soccer registration for girls and boys grades K to 7 will be held at the recreation department office, Cohasset Town Hall, from 9 a.m. to noon, Saturday, Sept. 7.

Soccer registration is for both fall recreational and spring soccer. The fee is $55 per child for each program. A separate check of $30 is necessary for the uniform deposit. Both checks should be payable to Cohasset Soccer Club.

Fall soccer begins Saturday, Sept. 21, and continues through Saturday, Nov. 16, 1996.

Call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-6791 with any questions about fall soccer.

EXTRA POINTS/Joe Reardon

No, I didn't go to the freshman soccer game

The first signs are already here.

Dates for sports physicals are pouring in. Youth league football and soccer players have picked up their uniforms and practices are underway.

Little League All-Stars tournaments have ended and Olympic gymnastics hero Kerri Strugg is quickly irritating the American public with a voice that would break glass.

The Big Tuna (Hold the Mayo as WEEI's Steve Buckley refers to him) is as ornery as usual.

We've put our hopes in Bledsoe, Glenn, Coates, McGinest and the rest of the Patriots.

And yes, even Vaughn, Wakefield, Stanley, Clemens and (gulp) Greenwell.

There really is nothing quite like the fall and sports.

Reardon

It's the time of year when I have to soul search and decide if I'm going to cover a Cohasset or Duxbury girls soccer game, a Hanover or Abington cross country meet, or a Rockland/Duxbury boys soccer game.

It's the time of year when I have to explain to irate parents that JV soccer team results aren't going to be between the sports pages unless they get motivated and write them themselves.

It's the time of year when I have to try and coordinate three photo assignments in three different towns in one afternoon, while my colleague Dave McKee does the same.

It's the time of year when I spend my Sunday evenings calling coaches from five different towns, when I'd rather be listening to the Lost-45s.

It's the time of year when I have to explain to youth coaches that someone from their league has to send in results.

cold, raw and raining. Wednesday was clear and sunny, but there wasn't any wind until one-thirty in the afternoon."

Thursday, the final day of competition, looked to be the best day of the three with clear weather. But just before the boats began to head out of Cohasset Harbor for the races' start, a thick fog developed.

"The fog just slammed in tight," Peterson said. "The visibility was about 25 feet. One-hundred yards inland people probably didn't even know there was fog."

Still, the event's organizers planned for all different scenarios. When the fog became thick, Harbormaster John Winters and his staff of Bob Baggs and Anthony Wigmore were close by to monitor the sailors' safety.

Winters was just one of a number of important workers vital in making the junior championship a complete success.

Lynn Previte, chairman of the social committee, did an excellent job in planning the pasta and meatball dinner for the kids on the first night of competition and the cocktail party for their parents. The dance filled the yacht club to near capacity and lunches for the kids were on time every day.

"All of the social activities went great," Peterson said, commending Previte's efforts. "It was a real fun week. The racing was competitive. The social activities were great and everything went off like clockwork."

The scoring of the races was run with such efficiency, Peterson said the results were posted in half the time they are in other regattas. Peterson said the scoring, directed by Joan Pyfrom and Judy Simmons, as well as housing, coordinated by Laura McAuliffe, provided the foundation of the regatta.

"When people have a nice place to stay and get there scores quickly, it keeps them at the site," Peterson said. "The mood then falls from competitive from social. That's when a lot of the fun starts.

"There was a good social calendar of things to do."

Sponsorship of the event was solid with BayBank, West Marine, Table Talk Pie Co., Simpson Spring Water Co. and Christy's Markets serving as the primary sponsors.

The junior championships move to the North Shore next year and Peterson doesn't think they will return to Cohasset for about 10 years. Site locations switch every year from North Shore to South Shore venues.

Peterson said he would like to be a part of the 1997 regatta, probably in a consultation capacity. He suspects many of the workers will also be asked for feedback as to how they handled certain situations.

"I would do it again at the next reasonable opportunity," Peterson said. "The bottom line is it's a fun event for the kids."

That's the number of doors I've knocked on, nights and weekends, since last fall. The people I've met have told me of their concerns about public safety, education, transportation, skyrocketing water and sewer rates, and numerous other issues we all face - family by family, neighborhood by neighborhood.

During these conversations, I've been listening carefully. Over the next few weeks, I will detail a new course of action for our Senatorial district. Stay tuned – and don't be surprised to see me knocking on your front door.

No, I didn't go to the freshman soccer game

Varsity high school sports come first. Period.

It's the time of year when I have to tell a parent that a cross country team that goes out for a pasta dinner at Papa Gino's the night before a meet would make as exciting a feature as my drive home from work.

It's the time of year when fat high school kids think they're athletes because they can squeeze themselves into a football jersey.

It's the time of year when youth coaches wear the same corduroy jackets as the eight-year-old soccer players on their teams.

It's the time of year when I have to squeeze past the Press Box Bouncer with my Mariner press pass in order to cover a game.

It's the time of year where the great debate of whether or not cheerleaders are athletes or not heats up again. For the record, I believe they are.

It's the time of year when field hockey referees feel compelled to blow their whistles every six seconds — because they own one.

It's the time of year when "Extra Points" add to a field-goal kicker's stats, not just rattle anti-tongue-in-cheek crowd.

It's the time of year when the Skippers play the Clippers.

It's the time of year when Hull High's football field slowly turns into the coldest spot in North America.

And finally, it's the time of year when I wish the players, coaches, athletic directors, fans, booster members and fellow sportswriters the best of luck for a happy fall!

There's nothing quite like the fall sports season.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

HOW MUCH TAXABLE PROFIT?

QUESTION: Any suggestions on how to keep the taxable profit on the sale of a home as low as possible?

ANSWER: You add legitimate expenses to the original cost, such as: title search, title insurance, lawyer's fee, and "points." Also add the cost of any capital improvements — finished attic or basement, new kitchen, added porch, patio or swimming pool.

You can deduct expenses from the sale price, such as: Realtor's commission, lawyer's fees, advertising costs and fix-up expenses if they were made within 90 days prior to the sale. Now, deduct the lower selling price from the higher original cost figure and you arrive at the taxable profit.

The Grand Tour

'Homeport', the Flint home at 99 Border St. is surrounded in summertime color. The flower boxes, mounted on the front of the house, spill over with Vinca ivy, salmon-colored geraniums and white impatiens. As you enter the front gate, Mrs. Flint has planted a bed of mixed perennials that delight the eye — tall, red Bee Balm, speckled pink lily, blue Veronica, bordered by salmon-colored impatiens. A honey-peach colored Hibiscus adds just the right touch of color. Mrs. Flint invited me to view her gardens in the rear of her lovely home where she has created an enchanting "secret garden" framing her lovely water views. What a labor of love — please be sure to stroll by and view this work of horticultural art.

Local rotarians pitch in to fight polio

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

Several months ago, Cohasset Rotary Club's president and a former president, Peter Guild and Peter Pearce, attended a meeting where Rotary International members passed a hat and collected $700 to fight polio in Kenya.

The Cohasset rotarians were then told that Kenya needed $8,800 more to effectively launch its program to eradicate the disease.

Monday night, at a tri-town rotary dinner at the Chart House, the Cohasset club presented T.R.O. Owade, Kenya's deputy ambassador to the United Nations, with a ceremonial check for $9,000.

"The gift of the Cohasset Rotary is truly a gift to the children of Kenya,"said Owade.

The Rotary International PolioPlus program began in 1985, when then international club president, Carlos Canseco, challenged rotary members to help him realize his dream of a world free of polio.

Rotary International has since raised over $245 million, and has helped immunize more than one billion children.

As of this year, 150, or 86 percent, of the countries in the world are polio free, said Louis Marciano, a former governor of the Rotary district, which covers all of Rhode Island and southern Massachusetts.

Polio in the remaining 23 countries, including China and India, will be the most difficult to combat, because of remote regions and lack of funds.

However, progress is being made.

In 1988, 35,000 cases of polio were reported; by 1995 that number had dropped to 3,753, said Marciano.

Rotary is working with the World Health Organization, US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the United Nations Children's fund, and several other organizations.

"To eradicate the disease we encourage government and nongovernment (agencies) to join together. It is usually people like you who make a difference," Owade told the rotarians.

The goal of the World Assembly, which 160 countries attended, is to wipe out the disease by the year 2000.

In order for a country to be considered disease-free, there must be no reported cases for a two-year period.

Small pox is the only disease that is considered eliminated around the world.

"Polio will be the second," Marciano said.

Over a week ago, Kenya began a massive campaign against polio, which affects the spinal cord.

By December, officials hope to have vaccinated every newborn to five-year-old child.

The polio vaccine also immunizes children against five other diseases: diphtheria, measles, tetanus, tuberculosis, and whooping cough. These diseases make up the plus in PolioPlus.

Two years from now, said Marciano, Cohasset rotary members will celebrate with Kenya.

"We'll have great pride to know that we are the country and the club that took care of another country," said Marciano. "It is a great thing to do."

Cohasset's contribution will go towards laboratory work, research, and program delivery improvements.

Kenya will play an integral role in studies, and will serve as an example to neighboring African countries.

If polio is eradicated, $1.5 billion will be saved worldwide.

Come to a carillon concert

Sally Slade Warner, carillonneur of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Cohasset, will play the final recital in the 72nd annual series of Summer Carillon Recitals on the church's 57-bell Taylor carillon Sunday, Aug. 25, at 6 p.m. The concert will feature requests previously submitted by listeners, as well as a selection of original music for carillon and transcriptions of familiar music.

The event will take place rain or shine and is free of charge. In case of rain, the music may be heard from parked cars. Printed programs will be available in the program stand by the church courtyard on Highland Avenue and will also be distributed on the common and at the entrance to Stagecoach Way. Listeners are invited to bring lawn chairs, blankets and picnic suppers. Following the recital, a tour of the tower and carillon will be offered to interested individuals. All are invited to attend.

Further information may be obtained by calling St. Stephen's Church (383-1083 weekdays between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m.); Church Carillonneur Sally Slade at (508) 475-2599; or Assistant Carillonneur Mary Kennedy (383-9599).

Edward Rowe Snow Day to be celebrated Aug. 25

The annual Edward Rowe Snow Day celebration, honoring the storyteller/historian who was known as "Mr. New England," will be held Sunday, Aug. 25, beginning at 11 a.m. at Fort Warren on Georges Island. The event is co-sponsored by the Friends of the Boston Harbor Islands, Inc., Metropolitan District Commission and M& M Marine Services.

Mr. Snow's widow, Anna-Myrle Haegg Snow, a native of Illinois, passed away in February. Mrs. Snow had attended all the previous Edward Rowe Snow Day gatherings, and this year's celebration will also honor her memory.

Following a gathering in remembrance of Mr. Snow and his preservation work in Boston Harbor, videos will be shown, and folk music will be provided by Curraugh's Fancy from 1 to 4 p.m. Participants may take the 10 a.m. boat from Long Wharf, Boston, or boats from Hingham or Lynn, to Georges Island.

For more details, call Friends of the Boston Harbor Islands, Inc. at 740-4290.

Kindergarten moves to Deer Hill

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

When school opens Wednesday, teachers and administrators will face the challenge of meeting the needs of the town's expected 1260 students.

As Cohasset public school enrollment continues its upward climb — the school department has had to make adjustments for overcrowding at the Osgood School.

This year all kindergarten sections have been moved to the Deer Hill school, which houses grades four through six, and will follow that school's schedule.

Supt. Stephen Hart said he is looking forward to the new school year.

"It's always exciting coming back," he said.

A highlight this year is the opening of the new high school athletic complex, called "Alumni Field," set for Sept. 8. The field, which is encircled by an all-weather track, has been more than a year in the making.

Hart noted that the track is available to the whole community and citizens are already using it for running and walking.

And in light of the recent controversy

Selectmen:

Mitigate don't litigate train

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset selectmen will not join their Hingham counterparts in a lawsuit against the MBTA nor will they ask the governor to stop the railroad project.

The board continues to be split on support for the $215 million train restoration project but a majority of selectmen have agreed not to formally oppose it.

> 'The board is split and I don't think we can send a letter. But we can certainly speak as individuals.'
> — Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown.

In June members of the Coastal Coalition, an anti-train group, showed selectmen a video they put together about the dangers of grade crossings and asked the board to co-sign a letter Hingham selectmen wrote to Governor William Weld asking him to reconsider his decision to give

Use 9-1-1 for emergencies

Police Chief Brian Noonan urged residents not to hesitate to dial 9-1-1 for emergencies.

He said some people, reporting emergencies, are still using 383-1212, the phone number used for emergencies before 9-1-1 came on line more than a year ago, and at times, are getting a busy signal.

For routine business or inquiries, residents should call 383-1212 or 383-1055.

There are enough 9-1-1 lines to cope with multiple emergency calls, Noonan said.

Town hall union contract approved

August's special town meeting approved appropriating $25,900 to fund salary increases, longevity payments and a signing bonus in a new contract inked between the town and the Konohasset Clerical and Custodial Association, the 11-member town hall union.

The three-year contract for fiscal years 1996-1998 is retroactive to July 1, 1995 and will expire June 30, 1998.

James Blackington of the personnel board said the contract was "fair and equitable."

Deborah Cook of the advisory board said the increases of 2-1/2, 2-1/2 and 3 percent a year bring the union in parity with other town employee unions.

In accordance with a new town by-law approved last spring, the contract was provided to the advisory board July 11 which was at least 30 days before town meeting, as required.

McGuire, who noted that negotiations took six to seven months, said this is the second contract for the union which was formed about six years ago.

One hard-fought contractual item won was getting the "entire" Thanksgiving holiday off, McGuire explained. Because the town hall is open 2-1/2 extra hours on Thursdays — employees previously had to make up the difference, she said.

New animal control officer is named

Kathleen McGuire, 6 Reservoir Rd., is the town's new animal control officer.

Selectman appointed the 28-year-old resident to the 19-hour-per week, post this week. The town appropriates about $11,000 annually for the position.

In a memo to selectmen, Police Chief Brian Noonan said he received eight applications for the job and interviewed four candidates.

"I feel Ms. McGuire is highly motivated and possesses the experience that the job requires," Noonan wrote.

McGuire, who is a Cohasset volunteer fire-fighter, has worked as a veterinary assistant at the Scituate animal shelter where she provided a range of care to the animals including administering medication, monitory overall health, grooming and feeding, and maintaining records for all borders and adoptions.

A Cohasset High School graduate, McGuire, who attended Chamberlayne College in Boston, works part-time as general manager at Rte. 3A Towing on Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

McGuire, who will report to Noonan, said she has always loved animals.

Selectmen asked Town Administrator Gregory Doyon to look into getting McGuire a pager.

People with animal control inquiries or reports of animal problems should call the police department at 383-1055 or 383-1212.

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce recently donated $500 to the Cohasset Police Department for its bike patrol program. The chamber believes the program will create a more moblie police unit in the village and harbor areas, reducing vandalism and crime. With bike patrol officer Chris Tarantino are Chamber officials Dean Rizzo (at left) of Aquarius Sunrooms and Domenic Micarelli of the Artist's Son Gallery and Picture Framer.

Mitigate don't litigate train, selectmen say

Greenbush the green light.

They also wanted Cohasset selectmen to write to the state Inspector General asking him to look into the "wasteful spending" that, they contend, the project entails.

Selectmen Nan Roth and Ronnie McMorris, both in the first year of their first term, were polled Monday on the project and both said they support Greenbush because it will help alleviate traffic problems that plague the region. Rather than opposing the train, they said the town should be putting its energies into mitigation efforts to make sure the town's interests are protected.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown remains personally opposed to the project but does not think the board should take an official position in opposition. Selectman Michael Sullivan did not attend Monday's meeting.

"The board is split and I don't think we can send a letter," Brown said. "But we can certainly speak as individuals."

An abutter to the rail right-of-way, Selectman Peter Pratt, who opposes the train, said this week that he has not received a clear determination from the state ethics commission on whether or not he can participate in formal discussions regarding mitigation issues that do not directly affect this property. But he did say, selectmen should "be leaders of the community in considering the actions of Hingham."

Hingham is suing the MBTA because it is using state and not federal dollars to build Greenbush therefore eliminating federal environmental review of the project. Hingham contends this is to skirt problems, the MBTA will face, in restoring the train which runs through that town's national register historic district.

Pratt called the MBTA's action in this matter "unprecedented" and warned that Weld has denied the town its rights under federal law.

But the MBTA maintains that state environmental laws are as tough as the federal ones and that it is legal to pay for Greenbush with state dollars while using federal dollars for the Plymouth and Middleboro lines, the other two legs of the Old Colony project.

Coalition members at Monday's meeting said they felt the MBTA would do whatever it wanted, making any town mitigation efforts moot.

"What if Andrew Brennan says 'No, no, no,'" said Rocky Lane resident Janice Brown. Brennan is the MBTA's representative in dealing with the Greenbush corridor communities.

Town Administrator Gregory Doyon pointed out that mitigation factors can be built into the final contractual permitting document giving them the force of law.

Russ Bonetti of Parker Ave. suggested train opponents get involved by attending the local mitigation meetings which have attracted few residents. Only one citizen attended the last mitigation meeting two weeks ago. The town has two mitigation committees, one consisting of town and public safety officials and the other is made up of citizens at large. Both will submit a report to selectmen.

Coalition members also questioned the wisdom of asking the MBTA to consider moving the station to the village. It is currently planned for the former Winter Garden skating rink site off Rte. 3A but Brennan has said the MBTA is receptive to the village site.

Janice Brown said a village station would wreak havoc on downtown traffic.

"We can't move roads," she said.

But selectmen said more people could walk to the train if the station was located downtown and the station would also help to revitalize the village.

A special town meeting on the train in Oct. 1994 and a local referendum in 199[illegible] were both split down the middle on the train issue.

Pauline Litchfield to retire

Town Hall custodian Pauline Litchfield will retire Sept. 19.

In her letter announcing her retirement, Litchfield said, "It has been a pleasure working with the employees of the town."

Selectmen said they would send Litchfield a letter thanking her for her years of service and wishing her well on her retirement.

Selectmen said they will investigate the possibility of using outside contractors to provide custodial service for town hall.

Shaw's construction moves along

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Construction crews working on the new Shaw's Supermarket at Cushing Plaza began demolition of the old Rockland Trust Company building last week.

This set the stage for pouring the foundation for the new supermarket, a job that should be underway within a month, according to Shaw's spokesman Bernard Rogan.

Rockland Trust Company has moved into its new building, Rogan said, and the other shopping plaza tenants are weathering the construction project well.

"By now, everybody is familiar with the drill over there," Rogan said.

Following construction of the supermarket foundation, the building's wall will go up, which will allow work to go on throughout the winter months. Pouring the foundations is critical to the project timetable. With delays anticipated during inside the building is important.

Before the building is completed, though, construction will begin on the site drainage system. Improving what Rogan called the "water management system" adds time to the project, but is a fundamental part of it.

"The whole site will be changed in one way or the other," he said.

Rogan said Shaw's officials are "always talking" with prospective tenants who may want to move into the new Shaw's Plaza, but renting space there will wait until after the supermarket is open.

"Then we'll be able to really sit down [with the prospective tenants]," Rogan noted.

The new supermarket is expected to open in August, 1997.

Cohasset Dramatic Club must pay $1K retainer

The Cohasset Dramatic Club will provide $1,000 to the town as a retainer to cover any clean-up or repairs to town hall.

The club will also pay a total of $700 rent for use of town hall for auditions, rehearsals and performances, selectmen said this week.

In explaining the need for a retainer, selectman Peter Pratt said that the shows require a lot of maintenance of the restrooms and auditorium.

"I hope the Dramatic Club will always have a place in the building...but at some point it's not a good deal for the taxpayers," he said.

Bruce Wilson of the Dramatic Club said he was committed to seeing that the club is more responsible.

Selectmen also want to have a look at the club's insurance policy, which Wilson agreed to provide.

Sewer counsel bill gets nod from selectmen

Selectmen recently approved payment of $11,176.56 to the town's sewer counsel Goodwin, Procter &Hoar.

At a later date, the board will discuss whether to retain special town counsel for litigation matters relating to the town sewer project. Non-litigation issues are being handled by the Cohasset's new town counsel Paul DeRensis, selectmen said.

Selectman Nan Roth favored keeping Goodwin, Procter & Hoar, which is paid $265 hour, on board for the time being.

"Paul DeRensis is doing so much right now," she said about town counsel's workload.

But Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the matter should be put on a future agenda for discussion.

Feline trio gets new lease on nine lives their little cries.

"I got up on the dumpster and saw them in there," Thornton said. "I can't tell you what it felt like to look down and see a very scared pair of little eyes looking up at me."

'I can't tell you what it felt like to look down and see a very scared pair of little eyes looking up at me.'

— Peter Thornton.

After getting some milk into the tiny kittens by allowing them to lick it off their fingers, Thornton and Clarke brought them to the Scituate animal shelter, where they are well on the way to recovery, said shelter director Joan McCafferty.

It was lucky they came along when they did, McCafferty said, noting that the kittens, who weighed in at just a few onces each, could not have survived long in the dumpster.

A week and a half later, the kittens no longer require around-the-clock bottle feedings and are thriving on a milk substitute and chicken-flavored baby food, McCafferty said. With more flea baths and tests scheduled, it will be another three weeks before they can be adopted, starting the second of their nine lives.

Sadly, abandoned and stray animals are nothing new to McCafferty, who noted that this kind of thing happens all too often.

"Something like this is deliberate and cruel, because the kittens suffered," she said.

While animal abandonment is an unfortunate fact of life, McCafferty said people wanting to dispose of their pets should at least make the effort to leave their animals at the shelter where they will be cared for until they are adopted by another family.

One of the region's few "no-kill" shelters, McCafferty said Scituate's shelter has placed 40 strays or abandoned cats this year alone.

"It's been a particularly bad year for us. We no sooner adopt one out and we get two more in," she said.

Currently at maximum capacity, the shelter's storage and feeding rooms have been converted into isolation rooms, where strays must be kept until they undergo a battery of tests for a variety of ailments including feline aids and leukemia, both of which are contagious among cat populations.

With the shelter's three newest feline additions well on the way to a full recovery, McCafferty is optimistic that she will be able to place the kittens in good homes. For information on adopting a pet call the Scituate Animal Shelter at (617) 545-8703.

Dive into water rate appeal urged

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

As Hingham and Hull move forward with their lawsuit appealing the Department of Public Utilities' recent rate hike approval for the Massachusetts-American Water Company, North Cohasset residents are pushing to have their town officials enter the fray.

"I am upset at our selectmen and our water commissioners who dropped the ball and aren't picking it up," said Jerusalem Road resident Maria Plante. "They're not doing anything to help us."

Plante said she hopes to appeal to Cohasset selectmen and to press to have town counsel get involved somehow in the neighboring towns' suit.

Plante, who has been leading the local opposition to the more than 150 percent water rate increase, continues to encourage the 600 or so Cohasset residents, who get their water from the private Hingham company, to write to the DPU as well as local and state officials and register their complaints.

Since receiving their first new bills, residents complaints have ranged from confusion in interpreting the bills, to anger about the higher rates for what many claim is poor quality water.

In Hull, Town Manager Phil Lemnios said local officials and citizens continue to be mystified by the DPU's decision to approve such a large increase to a company that he said has consistently provided poor water service.

In November, Mass-American filed its rate case with the DPU, seeking a 164 percent water rate increase to offset the the costs of building its new $40 million water treatment facility on Main Street in Hingham. The new plant, which was designed to improve water quality and flow for its more than 10,500 customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset, went on-line in April, and the new rates which will more than double the average customer's bills went into effect as of June 1.

Mass-American Director of Rates and Revenues, Rod Nevirauskas, noted that the first bill which went out around June 21, was pro-rated to June 1, but does not yet reflect the full increase. Customers' second bills, due out the third week in September will show the full 150 percent increase, he said.

In addition to a letter writing campaign, Plante happily lent a hand gathering some of the more than 1,000 signatures on a petition being to the DPU to reverse its decision.

Such reversals are rare, said DPU Executive Director Timothy Shevlin. And while he acknowledges that the department has received some complaints about the higher rates, that is not an unusual occurrence after a rate case is decided and customers' bills go up.

Still, Shevlin said the DPU's decision includes an agreement to monitor quality of service on an on-going basis.

"We may revisit this if we find the quality of service is not improved," Shevlin said.

In the meantime, Hingham's town counsel James Toomey said with the appeal filed, the DPU is now compiling the record and transcripts from the rate hearings held in the spring. After missing the deadline to intervene, Cohasset town officials served as limited participants in the hearings at that time, but Toomey suggested that there could be a way Cohasset could attempt to intervene in the appeal.

Toomey said he is not sure how quickly the legal challenge will move along but plans to do whatever possible to expedite the process as customers continue to pay higher water rates.

"I think we have a good case with significant legal issues," he said.

Watch for Derek to be strolling "around town" and give him a huge Cohasset welcome when you do see him!

Norwich University sent some good news this week. John P. O'Leary of Jerusalem Road was named to the dean's list for the spring semester. He is a member of the Class of 1999, with an undeclared bachelor of science major. He also received the Military Order of the World Wars for overall improvement in military and scholastic studies. We salute you, John!

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Howe are pleased to let us in on the fact that they just became great-grandparents for the sixth time last week! Cameron Palmer Burton was born at Beth Israel Hospital and weighed 7 pounds, 3 ounces. His mom and dad are Marnie and Craig Burton. Everyone is doing well and is happy as can be. We sure do congratulate you all!

Eric Swain, headmaster of Thayer Academy, announced the third trimester honor roll last month, and the ones we are proud of are Catherine A. Fallon, daughter of Leslie A. Fallon, and Jeffrey Schneider, son of John J. and Jeannette Schneider. Both were recognized for their outstanding academic achievement. Catherine is a member of the Class of 1997, and Jeffrey is a member of the Class of 2001. Keep up those good study habits!

Elizabeth Eaton Steadman was among 98 women awarded master of business administration degrees by Simmons College Graduate School of Business at ceremonies held last week. Lots of you will remember Elizabeth as Sunny Eaton, a 1961 CHS grad. Sunny, who now lives in Duxbury, is the daughter of local resident Louis F. Eaton Jr. She is a graduate of Mount Holyoke College and holds a master's degree in education from Harvard University.

How many of you remember Kristen Barry, formerly of Charlotte's Salon & Boutique? After she was in New York for only three months, she was hired by Joan Lunden of "Good Morning America" as her personal stylist. Kristen does Joan's hair every morning and has been travelling throughout the United States and Canada doing on-location shows. Kris' name will be appearing in lots of places; for instance, Good Housekeeping and Ladies Home Journal. She certainly has had the opportunity to work with many stars — were you one of them?!

Cardinal Cushing School and Training Center's assistant recreation director, Anne Matheson of Cohasset, and recreation director, Tom McElamn of Hanover, recently received 'Employee of the Year' awards at the Hanover school.

Speaking of Charlotte, did you know that her annual benefit fashion show raised more than $3,000? Proceeds were evenly divided between Cranberry Area Hospice and South Shore Hospice. She is one swell lady who does lots for so many!

Dean of students Jo-Anne Vanin has announced the names of students who qualified for the dean's list for the 1996 spring semester at UMass, Amherst. The following Cohasset students were named: Joseph F. Andrade, Cedar Street; Adam M. McNamara, King Street; and Rebecca Tosca, Pleasant Street. We surely congratulate you three scholars, and please be aware of how proud we are of all of you!

Be prepared! Now that double sessions for teams and their coaches have begun, there is sure to be a heat wave. We have never known it to fail. It sure is exciting for all the teams, though, because they will get to play on the brand-new fields. Which reminds us — don't forget the dedication of the field Sept. 8, beginning at 4 p.m. Be proud of our new field — it is the talk of the town and the South Shore.

Hope everyone saw the great picture of Henry Roth holding his sportsmanship trophy. It was awesome! A member of Cohasset Yacht Club, he dove into the water and retrieved the rudder of a fellow competitor just at the start of the first day of racing. What a guy!

That's the news for this week. We hope your news will be in print next time! It can be! Just give me a call at 383-0560.

A few thoughts on Labor Day...

Job security used to mean finding a good job with a good company. But now, for too many families, job security is a thing of the past. These days, a two-income family has become the norm, with many workers holding two or three jobs to make up for a good one lost to 'downsizing.' The working families of the Plymouth & Norfolk District need a State Senator who will foster economic growth and who understands the necessity of improved commuter transportation. Most of all, we need a Senator who will work for – and with – us. This Labor Day, I hope you'll join the working women and men who believe I can do the job and who have endorsed my candidacy...

EDITORIAL

Back to school

Your family just made it back from summer vacation. Everything is finally unpacked, things are settling down, and now it's time to gear up for the new school year.

If you're not prepared, you're not alone. For many families, gearing up for the new school year causes panic and stress.

After making trips to the mall for pencils, paper, notebooks and new outfits, parents then have to cope with getting children back into the routine of the new school year.

Very often by the second week in September, many parents find themselves drained both financially and emotionally.

Other families are facing the stress of a new school: some have just moved, some have children starting high school or middle school, or their child is heading off to kindergarten.

Whatever the situation, the new environment can create emotional turmoil for both children and parents.

Parents can feel overwhelmed by preparing for the new school year. Here are a few tips for a smooth start to the school year.

• Gradually ease the family into the new school routine. Take time to make a smooth transition into new bedtimes and morning routines.

• Don't feel pressured to spend a lot of money on new clothes for school. One or two new items may help your child feel better about their image, but hold off on making a lot of purchases. Children often have a better idea of what they want after seeing what their classmates are wearing, and may also be more comfortable about holding onto clothes from the previous year when they see others doing the same. Don't forget that summertime weather lingers throughout September, so all of that new flannel and corduroy may end up making your child very hot and cranky by the end of the day. Another plus to waiting: many items go on sale after the start of school.

• If possible, visit the school ahead of time. Making the trip removes the question mark for the child about a situation that is full of uncertainties. If a child feels comfortable at least with their physical surroundings, it may make other classroom anxieties easier to manage.

• If your child is a kindergartener heading off for the first time, or your child is starting a new school and they have trouble making transitions, find out what would make them feel more comfortable. Encourage them to bring a comforting object with them to school — but not too valuable, since things can and will get lost. Having a small reminder of home may make your child feel better during the day.

• If you have any questions or concerns, do not hesitate to call your child's teacher and/or school administration. If a younger child is having trouble adjusting, the teacher may be willing to allow the parent to remain in the classroom for a little while. If a child is having academic difficulty, the teacher will often have useful advice for the parents about what they can do to help at home. Remember, you are a critical part of your child's education, and most teachers and administrators welcome parent invovlement.

• If back-to-school stress is wearing you down, call the Parental Stress Line at 1-800-632-8188. Staffed by trained counselors, the Parental Stress Line of Greater Boston is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year for parents and caregivers who need support.

Thoughts on selectmen's meeting aired

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

This week's selectmen's meeting proved a number of interesting things. First, it showed that Mr. Doyon overstepped his bounds when he mistakenly told a reporter that in recent years the town selectmen and voters supported Greenbush restoration. His comments were incorrect.

Second, it became clear that there is little enthusiasm for committees set up to "mitigate" with the MBTA. (Mitigate: to make less severe.) Members of the audience, indeed, on the board as well, expressed serious reservations about trusting the MBTA. Battles with the authority are frequently mentioned in the papers (Whitman, Abington, Halifax, Hingham and Scituate).

Third, there appeared little enthusiasm for restoration among board members.

Fourth, the myth of traffic relief continues. Unfortunately, even the MBTA's SDEIR indicates otherwise. Of 38,000 cars on Route 3A each day, only 890 would be removed; of 67,000 on Route 3, only 440 would be eliminated. (SDEIR, pg. IV-28)

Selectwoman Nan Roth gives "very reluctant" support to restoration. Why? She feels it is the best way to improve commuting to Boston. So, her concerns about less than 2 percent of all South Shore commuters outweigh other facts she also knows. Like diesel particulate health hazards, like 264 grade crossings per day/1320 per week etc. Is this what she wants for Cohasset? I encouraged others to vote for her but am now realizing I may have made a serious mistake.

I suggest our board contact Selectman Kevin Dacey in Braintree. Mr. Dacey can relate how their town spent thousands of dollars on traffic and "mitigation" studies. Our board would then learn how the MBTA rejected their comments/suggestions/requests.

Our selectmen must work harder to protect our town from Greenbush restoration which the T itself concedes will bring "no more than a marginal change in highway traffic volume." (IV-28) The Final EIR has been delayed several times because of problems (lack of money? fudging air pollution figures? a conflict with the upcoming elections?) and so Greenbush is still not a reality. It is our job, our obligation, to continue the fight, realizing that the best "mitigation" is to keep the train out of our town altogether.

Cohasset man helps rescue women from burning car

"Dangerous curve" and "Slow — children" signs attest to the potential dangers of Clapp Road, a narrow, winding, heavily wooded street in Scituate's West End.

Those warnings were apparently ignored Sunday afternoon when a car driven by Jeanne Buell, 40, of Rockland, clipped a telephone pole and skidded broadside into a tree near the Norwell town line.

A neighbor, Arthur Masciarelli of Clapp Road Way, and passerby, John Lucitt of Cohasset, pulled the two occupants out of the flaming vehicle.

The driver of the car, Jeanne Buell, 40, of Rockland, has been charged with operating under the influence of alcohol. She and her passenger, Donna Casey of Cohasset, remain hospitalized in fair condition at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

Masciarelli, a resident of a nearby cul-de-sac, had just come in from mowing the lawn when he heard the impact around 2 p.m.

"I just ran and reacted to where I heard the sound," he said. Running barefoot through his neighbors' backyards, he approached the car along with Lucitt, who had been driving eastbound on Clapp Road.

Fern Langella, Masciarelli's next-door neighbor, had been working in her garden when she heard a loud bang.

"There were no tires screeching, just a loud crash," she said. "Just from the sound of it you knew it was bad."

She ran to investigate the source, then raced back to her house to call the police.

"The dashboard was already in flames and the car was smoking a lot," Langella said.

The impact of the tree on the passenger side door had spun the car entirely around. Passenger Casey had facial lacerations, was bleeding from the mouth and appeared to have a broken arm, Masciarelli said.

Lucitt pulled the driver, Buell, out the driver's side door while Masciarelli extricated Casey.

The two men laid the victims on an adjacent front lawn and waited for emergency personnel to arrive. When Casey appeared to stop breathing, Masciarelli sent neighbor Langella to fetch a blanket and pillow to prop her up. Both victims were unconscious when ambulance crews arrived.

The flames were so intense they melted a nearby mailbox and charred the leaves of the tree 15 feet above the road.

Masciarelli's wife Carol had been out shopping and arrived home to find the street blocked by emergency crews.

"I was afraid it involved one of the kids," she said.

Arriving home, she was startled by the sight of her husband, still clad in a tank top and white shorts, coated in blood.

"The kids and I are all right," were the first words out of his mouth.

Masciarelli said he has seen three accidents on the road since December.

"People fly down this road," Masciarelli said. "I've been nervous since I moved here about the kids wandering off."

He said he was afraid the car might explode while he was pulling the women out, but never seriously hesitated.

"There's no way I could have lived with myself watching this girl burn to death," he said.

Buell was also cited for speeding, causing serious bodily injury, marked lanes violation and operating to endanger.

The posted speed limit in the area is 30 mph, but many cars ignore the signs, Masciarelli said.

"People fly down this road," he said.

With The Candidates

Support for Greenbush thin among candidates

By STEVE ADAMS

Talking to South Shore voters during his first bid for Congress this summer, Democrat Ian Bowles of Falmouth said he's gotten an earful about transportation issues.

But the residents weren't sharing horror stories about expressway gridlock or complaining about the South Shore's status as the only Boston suburbs without commuter rail service. They were conveying their opposition to the Greenbush commuter rail restoration.

"Based upon what I know now, I'm inclined to oppose it," said Bowles.

Among candidates for the 10th District congressional seat, positions on the $215 million Scituate-to-Boston commuter rail project range from half-hearted support to out-and-out opposition.

Bowles said he plans to meet with MBTA officials to give them an opportunity to justify the project before taking an official position, but right now, the public safety and environmental aspects of the 17.7-mile commuter rail line restoration concern him the most.

State Rep. Edward Teague of Yarmouth, the front-runner for the Republican nomination, also opposes Greenbush, calling it a waste of taxpayers' money.

"It appears that even by the most optimistic estimates by the MBTA, just the capital construction cost will be $60,000 per passenger," said Teague. "That's an extraordinary sum of money. That and the environmental issues make this project highly questionable."

Teague said he prefers the creation of express bus lanes on the Southeast Expressway and expansion of commuter boat service, including commuter boats from Scituate Harbor, as more cost-effective alternatives.

If elected, Democrat Phil Johnston of Marshfield said he would make sure federal environmental agencies keep a close eye on the project.

He cited the MBTA's original plans to site the layover station alongside the North River in Scituate as an example of the need for federal intervention. EPA New England Administrator John DeVillars, a former Dukakis cabinet member with Johnston, helped force the MBTA to consider other options, such as the currently favored Scituate landfill site.

"(DeVillars) required that site be changed. I think it's appalling that they were going to place the terminus in wetlands," Johnston said.

Johnston said the Weld administration should have forced the MBTA to pursue a tunnel under Hingham Square to protect the national historic district there. A supporter of expanded mass transportation in general and Greenbush in particular, Johnston said the rail project is only one part of the solution.

"I've been driving in this traffic mess from Marshfield to Boston for 25 years," Johnston said. "One of the reasons I ran for Congress is to do something to straighten it out.

"I think it is an example of why it's important to people from the South Shore to have someone in Congress who lives on the South Shore," Johnston added. "I've experienced the traffic chaos for the past 25 years and I feel passionately that we need to address it sooner rather than later."

Johnston said the building boom on the lower South Shore, and the potential for growth in Plymouth, the largest town in the state geographically, will put increasing pressure on the Southeast Expressway.

"I doubt very much either of the other Democratic candidates have any special sensitivity to the problems. They haven't been forced to drive in it," he said.

Democratic front-runner William Delahunt of Quincy also supports Greenbush with reservations, particularly those raised by the town of Hingham. He said if elected, he would not attempt to hold up any possible federal funding.

"I'd attempt to secure the funding, given the decisions by the administration and the state legislature," said Delahunt, the Norfolk County district attorney. "I think we have to take steps to try to mitigate any adverse impact as far as the local communities, take every reasonable measure to see that that happens."

Delahunt offered a possible explanation about why two candidates from Cape Cod oppose Greenbush.

"They obviously never had to negotiate the traffic up Route 3A," he said.

He said he also favors expansion of water transportation, such as the planned ferries from Quincy's Marina Bay to downtown Boston.

"I generally support developing a commuter rail," said Democratic contender Walter Murray of Hull. "However, having grown up in Hingham, I can truly understand the problem of grade crossings through historic Hingham Square."

Murray, who lived in Hingham until he turned 18, said he would not support Greenbush unless the MBTA agrees avoid the Hingham Square crossing, either by building a tunnel or re-routing the tracks away from the area.

Like all of the candidates, Murray sees the need for upgraded mass transportation.

"It would be an asset to South Shore. Anything that allows a parent to get home earlier than they would have, to sit and eat a family dinner, would be valuable," he said.

Ilana Marks of Scituate, a leader of the anti-rail Coastal Coalition, said the group will probably endorse both a Republican and Democratic candidate prior to the Sept. 17 primary.

"Right now it seems like there are a lot of definite 'maybe's' coming out of the camps," Marks said.

Marks said the South Shore's next congressman will play a key role in the Greenbush project if a lawsuit recently filed by the town of Hingham prevails. The lawsuit challenges the Federal Transit Administration's decision to allow the MBTA to reject federal funding for the Greenbush line. The other two spurs of the Old Colony restoration — Plymouth and Middleboro — received 80 percent federal reimbursement.

Hingham officials interpret that decision as an attempt to evade a stringent federal environmental review of the project, which applies only if federal funds are used.

"If it goes back to 80 percent federal funding, our congressman will play a much larger role," said Marks. "If indeed Hingham does succeed with that, this will be back to a federal project and our congressman will be able to stop the train, or make sure it gets done."

Kindergarten moves to Deer Hill

surrounding the proposed new elementary school — a project Hart says the school department is looking forward to getting on with — the field ceremony will provide a chance for the community to come together, officials hope. The new school, which will replace the 70-year-old Osgood School, drew one of the largest turnouts at town meeting in the town's history earlier this month.

This week, Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown publicly encouraged citizens to put their differences behind them and attend the field celebration.

Hart said with the addition of two half-day kindergarten sections, Osgood was one classroom short. So by moving the kindergarten to Deer Hill, the extended-day kindergarten and day-care programs were moved to Osgood; and a collaborative class, previously housed at Deer Hill, went to the high school.

This year new principals, Paul Callahan of Hingham at Deer Hill and Merilee Cantelmo of Marshfield at Osgood, will be at the helm of their respective schools.

Callahan replaces Donna Hartlage, who resigned earlier this summer, and Cantelmo replaces Linda Whitney, who stepped down to spend more time with her family.

Curtis Collins starts his second year as principal of the junior/senior high.

Other new faces include Lynn Silvia who is the new director of student services; reading teacher Patricia Ford and science teacher Daniel Jones at the junior/senior high; fifth-grade teachers Roger Bourassa and Kathleen Jordan and sixth-grade teacher Robert Bergquist at Deer Hill; second-grade teacher Lauren Cook at Osgood; Linda Anderson, technical coordinator at Deer Hill and Joanne Hurley, new adjustment counselor at Osgood.

The school department will also hire a new kindergarten teacher for an additional class this year and a special needs teacher at Osgood.

This year's expected total enrollment of 1260 is up from 1230 a year ago and 1183 in 1994. The 78 students who graduated in June will be replaced by 108 new seventh-graders. The junior/senior high houses grades seven-through-12.

Lunch prices — $1.40 at Osgood and $1.60 (or $2.25 for the deluxe lunch) at Deer Hill and the Junior/Senior High haven't changed. Opening day menu includes grilled hot dog on a roll with chips; carrot sticks with dip; fresh fruit and milk choice.

Effects of the four-year-old Education Reform Act, the state law that sets out to standardize education across the state, are still being felt in Cohasset, Hart said.

"There's a great emphasis in development of curriculum — to reflect the changing needs of society," he explained.

Hart said schools are being asked to do more with integrating technology into the curriculum and in subjects such as English, math and science to place more emphasis on critical reasoning.

Under education reform, he said Cohasset schools continue to prepare for eventual state assessment tests and a test for 10th graders, which students will have to pass as a requirement for graduation.

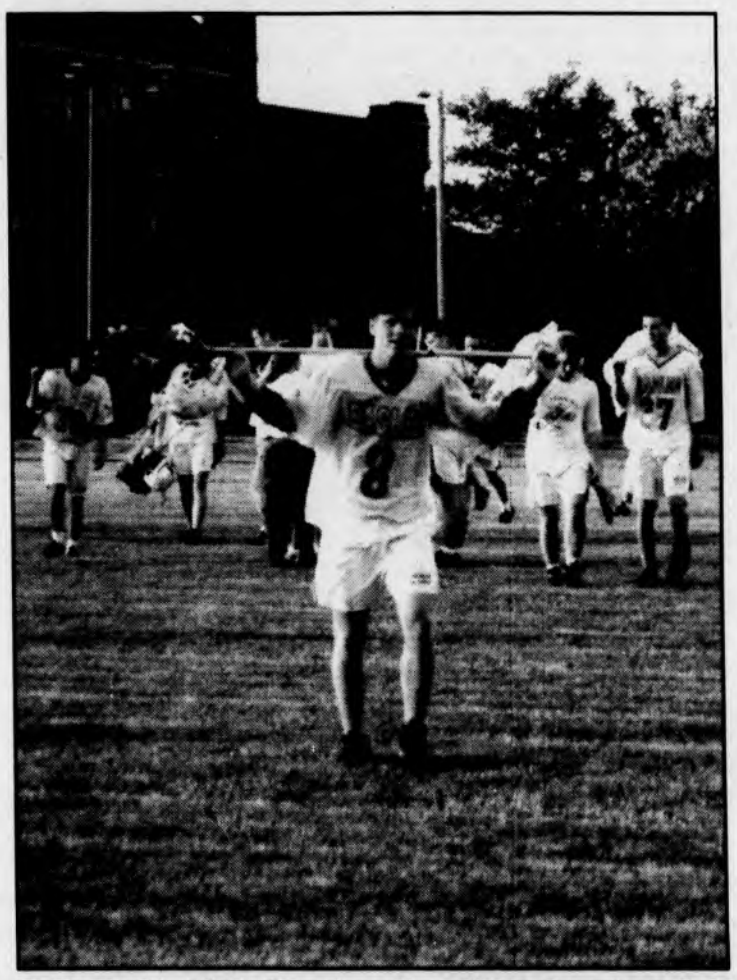
The Offseason Grinder

For football and lacrosse standout Matt Rossi, game is won off field



B.C. High's Matt Rossi walks off the lacrosse field following a game. The speedy defender is also a crack tailback on the Eagles' varsity football team and believes the squad has a good shot at a 1A Super Bowl bid.

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Matt Rossi has never been one to back away from hard, exhausting conditioning work.

After spending a season in the fullback slot on Boston College High's varsity football team, the solid, 6-1 200-pound Cohasset resident decided he wanted to move to the the tailback position.

Rossi knew he'd have to improve his speed so he went to work this summer, dedicating himself to a conditioning program that would wear out most high school athletes.

From June to mid-July, Rossi worked out for two hours per day, sprinting the steep Oak St. hill, jumping rope and lifting weights.

That was just for starters. The real work followed shortly after.

Once the middle of July rolled around, Rossi increased his workouts to five days a week, anticipating the preseason football practices.

Rossi arrived in camp stronger and faster than last year. He's reaping the benefits of his summer regiment now. Rossi No. 1 on the tailback depth chart and is expecting to carry the ball 20-25 times per game.

He is enjoying preseason practice more than ever before. There is a strong feeling of optimism among the players and Rossi is excited by the prospects of what the Eagles can accomplish this season on the gridiron.

"I don't want to talk too early," Rossi said, "but I believe we definitely could be Super Bowl contenders."

Rossi is concentrating solely on football now, but it's on the lacrosse field in the spring where the tri captain has made his biggest mark and became a household name in lacrosse circles around the state.

Rossi helped lead the Eagles to a final-four trip in last spring's tourney before falling to Weymouth, 11-9. The season was hardly a disappointment, however, for Rossi or his teammates.

B.C. High finished with an overall 14-3 mark, garnering a sixth-place state ranking in the process. A fairly new program with just seven seasons under its belt, the lacrosse squad qualified for its fourth consecutive tournament and head coach Tom Frisoli earned Coach of the Year honors in the Boston Globe.

Rossi, too, wound up with a number of individual honors. Playing in the defender position, he used his speed and strength to score three goals and assist on 11 others. His aggressiveness in his own end and ability to set up the Eagles' offensive pressure caught the attention of opposing coaches. Rossi was selected to the All-Scholastic squads in both the Patriot Ledger and Boston Herald, along with second-team honors in the Globe. Add the Central Division All-Star selection to the list and Rossi had the type of season high school players dream about.

Rossi was pleased with his junior year campaign and credits his overall speed and strength as the contributing factors to his success.

"It helped that I was faster than a lot of people I was defending," Rossi said. "You may not have the skills of another player, but if you're faster than him it doesn't really matter because you can beat him to the ball. You don't have to use head fakes and body fakes to try and get by him.

"It's just a nice thing to have."

Rossi first became interested in lacrosse when he was looking for an alternative to playing baseball. He attended Cohasset High in the seventh and eighth grade, playing on the baseball team both years. When he transferred to B.C. High, Rossi decided to give lacrosse a try.

"I was interested in trying something new," he said. "I don't want to put baseball down because I still like it, but you can use more of your skills playing lacrosse. It's a quicker game."

Rossi's big break came during his sophomore year when he was promoted to varsity from the JV squad just three games into the season. Although his skills on the field were still understandably raw, Rossi's play was good enough for the coaches to insert him into the starting lineup where he has been ever since.

"They practiced me a couple of times and then put me in the lineup," Rossi said.

Rossi came into his own this past spring and will captain the team with two other South Shore residents; Hingham's Dan Sullivan and John Tisiaski.

When the football season comes to an end, Rossi intends to get back to serious training for the lacrosse season during the winter. He spends the cold months lifting in the Eagles' weight room under the supervision of Scituate's Mark Conroy. Conroy, a science teacher at B.C. High prepares lifting programs for athletes on an array of teams.

Rossi has confidence in Conroy's methods and weightlifting knowledge. "He really knows his stuff. Mr. Conroy is one of the best around."

With defending state champion Newton North losing some key players from its '96 team, Rossi is confident the Eagles' laxmen can compete with the perennial lacrosse powerhouse.

"We have a strong defense coming back and a lot of good players up front," Rossi said. "I think we could contend next year."

There's little doubt Rossi will do the work he needs to in order to help put the Eagles in a solid position to win.

That happens with athletes who put as much into their conditioning as their games.

For Rossi, his success is determined in the offseason.

Recreation soccer registration

The final soccer registration for girls and boys grades K to 7 will be held at the recreation department office, Cohasset Town Hall, from 9 a.m. to noon, Saturday, Sept. 7.

Soccer registration is for both fall recreational and spring soccer. The fee is $55 per child for each program. A separate check of $30 is necessary for the uniform deposit. Both checks should be payable to Cohasset Soccer Club.

Fall soccer begins Saturday, Sept. 21, and continues through Saturday, Nov. 16, 1996.

Call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-6791 with any questions about fall soccer.

EXTRA POINTS/Joe Reardon

My pen's out of ink and I don't have another

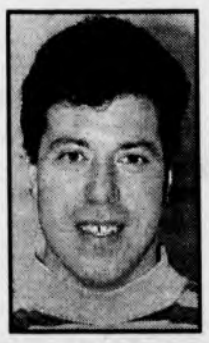
The ball didn't drop in Times Square. There were no wild parties, hats or noisemakers. Resolutions? Nope, not this time.

The calendar may say it's Aug. 28, but as far as we're concerned in the sports department, it's the start of a new year.

Bring on the high school sports!

As exciting as the prospects of a new sports year are, there is that ping of anxiety. You want things to run smoothly all Fall; plenty of photos, balanced coverage and few conflicts come tournament time. But of course, there are always flies turning up in the ointment. For the most part, they're minor inconveniences. Nothing so bad you'd have visions of lining up opposite Cohasset's defensive line without any equipment.

Still, there are certain situations that wake me up in the middle of the night, heart pounding and dripping with sweat.



Reardon

I'm hoping I can go another season without a field hockey game being decided by a "stroke off," after overtime and sudden death don't break the deadlock.

And then there's the ghastly thought of covering a football game where team rosters aren't readily available. It's very rare for both squads not to supply a roster, but it has happened. You try writing down the names of the offensive linemen who opened up the hole for the running back's 40-yard touchdown jaunt without a handy roster by your side.

Then there are the times when one player is wearing another's jersey. That's when having a roster is more of a curse than a luxury. It would be completely disastrous if the "man with no name" rushes for 210 yards and three TD's.

When the weather gets frigid, you have to be as mentally prepared to cover the games as the players who are participating. There's nothing worse than underestimating just how cold it really can get on Cohasset High's soccer field. You wind up spending the half in your car with the heat blasting. The worst case was covering the Hull/Cohasset football game, three years ago. It was so cold on Hull Gut, I parked my car up close to the end zone fence and took notes from my own little press box on wheels.

Back to field hockey. I hope somewhere along the line I'm not "invited" to play with a group of crack field hockey players after they felt offended by something in the column about their sport. To avoid that right now, for the record based on my own experience, I TRULY BELIEVE SOME OF THE BEST CONDITIONED AND MOST TALENTED ATHLETES play field hockey in the Fall.

I dread the first call I get, and rest assured I will get it, that there was no coverage of the PeeWee "Z" Pop Warner football game against Walpole. Of course, you realize the 4-foot-nothing, 80-pound halfback will rush for 350 yards on four carries in leading his team to a 77-6 rout. And I'll be accused of missing the boat because I didn't witness the historic

Nantasket Beach is star of tonight's 5K race

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

While local groups are busy promoting the town and its seaside history as tourist attractions, Blackie Palmer is hoping to promote what Hull is known most for this evening.

An expected 100 runners will gather on Nantaskest Beach for the 6:30 p.m. start of the 1st Annual Blackie's Restaurant 5K Beach Run.

Palmer, the restaurant's owner, and race director Karen Petrillo said on Monday they both have received positive feedback from the community about holding a race on the beach itself. A 5-mile race, which also started and finished on the beach, was discontinued several years ago.

As the biggest and most popular attraction in town, Palmer doesn't believe enough attention is paid to the beach as unique natural resource of Hull.

"Not enough people are trying to promote the beach itself," said Palmer. "I play a lot of different sports and was once an avid runner. There used to be a beach race and I wanted to start another one up again."

And as owner of a restaurant, Palmer gets the chance to converse with people. Many, he said, are runners and receptive to the idea of the beach race.

"People come into the restaurant and I find that many of them are runners," Palmer said.

The Beach Run joins the Nantasket Seaside 4-mile Race as a chance for runners to get in a late-summer competition on a course which offers gorgeous scenery that many other towns just don't have.

The race, which is described on the entry blank as a "too-scenic-out-and-back-course," is by post-entry only. Starting in front of Blackie's, the course follows the beach to just over 1-1/2 miles in the Kenberma St., area where it doubles back to the finish.

Money left over from the event will go towards the Hull Booster Club, an organization Palmer is a strong supporter of.

"Any time you can make donations to kids and sports, it's a great boost to the community," Palmer said.

For $10, entrants receive a T-shirt, refreshments and beer. The application also warns that runners may not be heading home that soon after the race's end by stating Blackie's "is a good place to hang out after," which could "make your spouse real mad."

Palmer said the beach run is not a one-shot deal. He is excited about the prospect of the race becoming an annual event in the twilight of the summer.

"Absolutely," Palmer said of the possibility the race will continue.

Fortunately, I figure the odds of any one of these incidents occurring is 1,000 to 1. The odds do climb to 5-1, however, when it comes to my pen running out of ink at the South Sectional soccer finals.

And guess who forgot to bring an extra Bic.

How to avoid a trust blowup

By Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

Averell Harriman had the best of intentions in 1935. That year, the railroad magnate and future ambassador to Great Britain set up four trusts to take care of his children.

The suit ... charges Pamela Harriman with restructuring the trust's investments in order to support her extravagant lifestyle. According to the suit, Averell Harriman's two daughters, Mary Fisk, 77, and Kathleen Mortimer, 76, were "dependent on trust income for all or part of their livelihoods," and lost $200,000 in annual trust income because of this misconduct.

Nearly 60 years later, Harriman's good intentions have landed his heirs – two daughters, six grandchildren, and 11 great-grandchildren – in U.S. District Court in New York. On Sept. 13, the heirs filed suit against Pamela Harriman, the U.S. ambassador to France and Harriman's widow; Clark Clifford, former defense secretary under Lyndon Johnson and Washington, D.C., attorney of BCCI fame; and six other trustees, charging them with breach of their fiduciary duties, gross negligence, and willful malfeasance. The suit also charges several trustees with self-dealing, professional malpractice, and scheming to defraud the beneficiaries. Because of their actions, the heirs say, roughly $25 million in trust assets has now shriveled to $3 million.

To date, the heirs are still fighting with Pamela Harriman and her co-defendants in court to get $30 million in damages.

Naming trustees is one of the single most-nettlesome areas of estate law. Countless experts say if you don't do it correctly, all of your good intentions for your heirs will go up in smoke. The Harriman case illuminates the issues.

Specifically, the Harriman heirs say the defendants squandered $21 million in trust money on a failing New Jersey resort without disclosing "the personal economic interests" that Pamela Harriman had in the investment, and another $3.1 million on "risky startup companies." According to the suit, "No due diligence had been conducted before making these investments." Furthermore, the suit says, the defendants kept the heirs in the dark about these investments.

Even more alarming, the suit also charges Pamela Harriman with restructuring the trust's investments in order to support her extravagant lifestyle. According to the suit, Averell Harriman's two daughters, Mary Fisk, 77, and Kathleen Mortimer, 76, were "dependent on trust income for all or part of their livelihoods," and lost $200,000 in annual trust income because of this misconduct.

Harriman and Clifford could not be reached for comment.

Clearly, setting up a bullet-proof trust isn't easy. But by understanding the issues and pitfalls, families can better protect the assets they'll leave to their children.

The Harriman story is a public illustration of the importance of setting up fail-safe trusts. Every family should learn from them. Experts also advise the following:

Get a pro. Alexander Bove, a Boston trust and estate lawyer, says anyone who plans to set up trusts for large sums on behalf of their beneficiaries should avoid rancor by not choosing relatives.

Make sure the trustee follows the law. New legislation, known as the "prudent investor" law, is already in effect in 16 states, including Florida, California, and Texas.

This law says trustees must now view trust portfolios as a whole, as well as consider the prudence of individual investments. That means they'll have to practice the fine art of asset allocation by taking "a sophisticated approach," says Richard Marin, a managing director at Bankers Trust. For example, trustees must consider the effects of inflation and any tax consequences. However, beneficiaries beware: The new law still gives trustees wide latitude to invest in risky derivatives, contracts that derive their value from another financial instrument.

Be sure the trustee understands your goals. For example, if you are allowing your children to receive trust funds for education, the trustee should have a sense of whether you mean to pay strictly for a college tuition or also for an apartment off campus. Alexander Bove also suggests incorporating language in the trust agreement that allows you to remove a trustee if you are unhappy with his or her performance.

Stay informed. Generally, non-professional trustees must file annual reports to each beneficiary; professionals must do so quarterly. These reports must note each beneficiary's capital account balance, type of investments, and performance. If you don't get that information and the trust documents allow it, you have the right to get rid of the trustee.

Piano lessons resume

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher of pianoforte, resumes her lesson schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset. Her personalized instruction has attracted students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston, magna cum laude. She is a member of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society. She has taught in Swampscott, Lincoln, Norwood, and currently in Cohasset.

As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression. She encourages her students to improvise and compose, and strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts through the medium of the piano.

Village farmers' market update

The Cohasset Village Farmers' Market is being sponsored by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce through the efforts of the Village Revitalization Committee.

The market will be held every Thursday from 3 to 7 p.m. through Sept. 26. These hours were chosen to attract people who cannot do their shopping during the conventional 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. time. The market area is located in the municipal parking lot (in front of the old garage), behind Cohasset Village. Ample parking will therefore be available for both vendors and customers. Set up time will begin at 3:30 p.m. on the day of the market. Clean up is planned at 8 p.m.

Vendors will sell items such as fruits, vegetables, fresh and dried flowers, herbs, oils and vinegars, breads and baked goods. Confections and homemade crafts are also welcome.

Additionally, live folk music will be performed during selected farmers' market evenings.

Future performers are: Aug. 29, singer/songwriter David Crossland.

Anti-smoking funds cut

Local programs affected

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

While concern about smoking and tobacco use is reaching new heights on a national level, here in Massachusetts law makers are cutting back programs that help people kick the habit.

Despite voters' 1992 approval of a 25 cent per pack cigarette tax to help fund tobacco control programs across the state, including those sponsored by the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative, the state legislature recently voted to cut funding by $10 million.

"It's ironic, with so much emphasis being placed on this at the national level," said director Dawn Sibor of the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program.

And according to Sibor, the cuts are not limited to tobacco programs. They will also have an impact on Department of Public Health programs including DARE and some other school-based activities.

While statewide the cuts amount to 13 percent, the Collaborative's program received a 20 percent cut, Sibor said. Formed in 1994, the Collaborative's original budget, which covers not only salaries but also unique educational programing

But town was ready for worst

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Hurricane Edouard may not have lived up to its reputation — but Cohasset's emergency plans were in place just in case the storm struck a wallop.

Civil defense director Arthur Lehr said the police, fire, water and department of public works were prepared for the worst. Eastern Edison also had a truck in town which was not needed because there were no power outages in Cohasset.

The Red Cross set up an emergency center at Scituate High School which Cohasset would have shared if needed. In emergency conditions, residents would be evacuated to Cohasset High and driven from there by school buses to Scituate High, Lehr explained.

"(Gov.) Weld declared a state of emergency but it was not needed in Cohasset," he said.

Lehr said the hurricane turned out to be a dud as far as Cohasset is concerned.

"I woke up at 2 a.m. expecting to go to work and it was practically calm — so I said the heck with this. They (public safety) knew where to get me if needed," Lehr said noting high tide was between 2:30 and 3 a.m. Monday morning and could have caused flooding problems if there had been enough wind.

Eastern Edison spokesman Ruth Stetson reported very scattered outages in the company's 17 communities. Eastern Edison serves Cohasset.

Two of Cohasset's neighbors, Scituate and Norwell, experienced outages when a limb fell on a wire on River Street in Norwell at 2:53 p.m., Monday, knocking out power to 1,950 customers in those towns. All power was restored by 3:38 p.m., Stetson said.

The hurricane season starts around June 1 and ends Oct. 1 when the nor'easter season starts, Stetson said. Edison takes hurricanes very seriously and conducted a storm meeting last Thursday going over a check list of supplies, staff and schedules.

"Safety, safety, safety is our first priority," Stetson said. "We don't want to lose anyone in our service area or any of our workers who are out trying to restore service."

Athletic complex to open

Earlier this summer "Opening Ceremonies" meant the Olympics in Atlanta.

But now with the 1996 Olympic Games a memory — Cohasset is gearing up for its own "Opening Ceremony" to be followed by weeks of athletic contests.

Alumni Field, the new town field complex at the high school, will officially open at 4 p.m., Sunday, Sept. 8.

Organizers hope that townspeople will flock to the much-anticipated event which will feature Cohasset High alumni from

Turkey Hill acquisition is moving forward

While local conversation groups wait to hear if a state grant application has been approved, they are soliciting donations for the additional monies needed to acquire Turkey Hill.

A spokesman for the Trustees of Reservations said last month the groups are three-quarters of the way toward their goal of raising $307,000.

A decision on the state grant is expected in October, according to Trustees of Reservations Southeast Regional Supervisor Tom Foster. If the grant is awarded, and the fund-raising is successful, the property could be con-

What if Edouard tracked to the west?

If Hurricane Edouard had tracked some 50 to 100 miles farther to the west, we would have had a much more significant storm here. The hurricane tracked almost due north along 70 degrees west longitude from east of Cape Hatteras, and then turned to the northeast well before reaching Cape Cod. Predictions of a track more to the west of north which would have brought the center into Connecticut or Rhode Island failed to materialize. If those predictions had come true, we would have had a destructive hurricane on our hands here in Cohasset. The strongest winds in a hurricane moving northward up the east coast of the United States occur to the right of the center, and blow from the southeast and south. In addition, the forward speed of the storm was less than 20 mph when it reached 40 degrees north latitude; much slower than the average 30 to 50 mph for most northward moving hurricanes. This allowed for gradual weakening over the cooler ocean waters.

The effects here were of a minimal tropical storm with winds gusting to 30 to 45 mph, and rainfall was moderate. The lowest barometric pressure was not that low here, at 29.79 inches. The central pressure of the storm was still well under 29 inches as it passed to our southeast.

The tropics continue very active with Hurricane Fran now taking aim at the southeast US coast. We might even experience some effects of a second storm later this week. The high-level steering winds continue from the southwest here.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen will set aside 10 minutes at 8 p.m. on their meeting nights to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda, selectmen said.

Boards have openings

There are openings for volunteers on several town boards for information, please call the selectmen's office at 383-9900.

Compost bins available

Due to efforts of the Cohasset Recycling Committee, composting containers are available for purchase by townspeople at a very good price due to a grant from the state Department of Environmental Protection, said Jack Hubbard of the recycling committee.

There are two styles of containers, the Earth Machine and the Brave New World Composter. Prices range from $20 to $30.

The new containers are on sale at from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday and Wednesday through Saturday at Aquarius Sunrooms on Depot Court. Payment must be by check made out to the town of Cohasset.

Special Town Meeting is slated for Oct. 28

Selectmen set fall's special town meeting for Monday, Oct. 28 which they say will allow enough time in September for boards and departments to submit warrant articles in time to have the warrant printed.

classes that graduated as far back 60 years ago to this year. The Sons of the American Legion will provide the color guard, the Star Spangled Banner will be performed by Cohasset High vocalists led by Emily Henderson, and the PSO will provide refreshments for the ceremony which is expected to last about an hour.

Gary Vanderweil, who has been one of the driving forces behind the project, will make a few remarks. And alumni and current students will take a triumphal lap around the new, state-of-the-art track, said athletic director Clark Chatterton.

The field lights will also be turned on to ceremonially kick off the high school season which gets underway on Monday when the girls' field hockey and soccer teams play.

Chatterton explained that the new flag pole is due to arrive today or tomorrow. Wayne Sawchuk, who has served as clerk-of-the-works for the project and has been involved with the field since its inception, will get a crane and put it up in time for Sunday's celebration, he said.

The $775,000 track & field project successfully passed the 1994 annual town meeting and subsequent debt exclusion override vote.

After the design was finalized and upgrades made to Milliken field, and construction of two new tennis courts and repairs to others were completed, the field construction project began in June last year.

The project was a long time coming.

Milliken Field was built in 1938 on land donated to the town by Mrs Hugh Bancroft. Lillard Field (directly behind the high school) was added in 1958. In 1985-87, a field study committee failed to win town meeting support for a new field. The next committee, formed in 1987, picked up where its predecessor left off. It took several years of planning but this time the whole town got behind the project.

The ribbon cutting and flag raising at Alumni Field is set for 4 p.m., Sunday. The track around the new field (shown here in this photo taken last week) has now been striped, athletic director Clark Chatterton said Wednesday.

New faces are among school staff

When school doors opened yesterday, close to 20 new staff members streamed in with the students.

All but one of the new hires are filling existing positions that opened up due to retirements or job changes.

To accommodate the increased number of kindergartners, Lori Hyslip has been added as a teacher. There are six kindergarten sections this year. There were only four last year.

There are three new administrators in the system. Both the Osgood and the Deer Hill School have new principals.

Marilee Cantelmo, who recently was an elementary principal in Bedford, and was formerly a elementary curriculum coordinator for Cohasset, will be at the Osgood School. Cantelmo lives in Marshfield.

Peter Callahan, who has been an assistant principal at an elementary school in Canton for the past six years, will be at the Deer Hill.

Lynn Silva, who has extensive experience in special education, will be the new director of student services. Sharon Kilpatrick has been hired as her secretary.

Other new faces at Osgood are Lauren Cook, a second-grade teacher and Joanne Hurley, an adjustment counselor.

The Deer Hill also welcomed two fifth-grade teachers, Roger Bourassa and Kathleen Jordan; Robert Berquist, a sixth-grade teacher; Linda Anderson, a technology coordinator; and Kim Maynard an activity aide.

New teachers at the high school are: Dan Jones, a science teacher who graduated from Cohasset High; Sandra Conway a health aide; and Alice McCarthy an instructional aide.

Teachers Melissa Barry, Rose Collins and Bill Kite will be returning after a one-year leave of absence.

Nigel Cracknell of England will be teaching English at the high school, while Cohasset's Ron Emmons will be teaching in England for the year.

Turkey Hill acquisition is moving forward

veyed to the towns by the end of the year. While the towns will own the property, the Trustees will manage it.

Earlier this year, the Trustees of Reservations said it had entered into an agreement with the heirs of Joseph Saponaro to purchase the 55-acre property that straddles the town line between Hingham and Cohasset.

The Trustees, the Hingham Land Conservation Trust, the Cohasset Conservation Trust, and conservation commissions in Cohasset and Hingham, obtained an option to buy Turkey Hill for $810,000.

Hingham's share of $164,500 for the 30 acres on its side of the town line was voted at the April town meeting. Cohasset voters have agreed in principal to contribute $109,600 towards the purchase and will vote on the appropriation at a special town meeting this fall.

Foster explained that the towns have applied for a state grant of $450,900 to cover 54 per cent of the purchase price. While officials in Boston have been impressed by "the great collaborative effort" of the towns and the private groups to acquire this land, Foster acknowledged that there is a great deal of competition for a limited amount state grant money.

The private conservation groups are now trying to raise the balance of $207,000, which includes funds for additional expenses, such as legal fees, appraisals, demolition of the former riding stable, and any site clean-up costs. An additional $100,000 will be needed to renovate the Saponaro house for use as a caretaker's residence, for construction of a parking lot, and landscaping around the entrance.

Foster also noted there is a possibility that an observation platform could be built at a former Nike missile radar tracking site on Turkey Hill, and a cinder block building used in connection with that installation could be converted to a visitors center, with exhibits that chronicle the history of the property, as well as maps of the Turkey Hill trails.

Turkey Hill is one of the last undeveloped coastal drumlins—created by receding glaciers—on the South Shore. During the War of 1812, local residents gathered at Turkey Hill to witness a naval battle off the coast of Scituate. Today, the hill provides a spectacular view of Boston Harbor, the Harbor Islands, and the city's skyline.

Foster said Joseph Saponaro, Jr. of Winchester has agreed to sell the property to the conservation groups, rather than to a developer, to maintain the land as open space, which will expand a "green belt" that now includes the 2,900-acre Wompatuck State Park and 800-acre Whitney and Thayer Woods.

The joint effort of the five parties involved allows each to effectively purchase the property at a fraction of its actual cost, Foster said.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

A GOOD INVESTMENT

QUESTION: Ownership of a single home has always been viewed as a prize necessity. Is it a good investment vehicle also?

ANSWER: For every investor who makes a killing in the stock market, you'll find another who has been hurt badly. This rarely happens in real estate. It's a stable and safe investment which doesn't fluctuate from day to day which is good for ulcer-prone investors. Then there's leverage. Real estate can be purchased by using 20 percent down, whereas other investments require 50-100 percent cash. The long-term outlook is still good for appreciation. Also, the tax incentives are super.

Anti-smoking funds cut, local programs affected for 14 South Shore Communities was $300,000. After two cuts, the most recent being the largest so far, Sibor said the budget is down to $225,000.

Sibor said she is not sure to what extent programs will have to be cut, but the Collaborative has already eliminated some hours of operation and its Hanover office is no longer open on Fridays.

"We're reviewing the budget now to determine if there will also have to be cuts in programs and materials," Sibor said.

Despite the cuts, Sibor said the Collaborative remains committed to its goal "to make smoking history on the South Shore."

"We're out there trying to help people quit smoking and prevent kids from starting," she said.

In addition to free cessation and education programs to help people quit smoking, the collaborative also offers merchant training to bring tobacco vendors on the South Shore up to speed on state and local tobacco regulations especially the prohibition of the sale of tobacco products to minors under 18 years of age.

Over the last two years, the Collaborative's community educators have visited every tobacco vendor in all 14 towns and has provided signs on the law for merchants and materials for employees on how to check identification to avoid selling tobacco products to those under 18.

Sporadic compliance "stings" staged by the Collaborative, in which minors are sent into a store to purchase cigarettes, have been held throughout the South Shore. Depending on town regulations, stores which are repeatedly caught selling tobacco products to minors can face fines and or lose their permit to sell tobacco for a period of time. The incentive to tow the line is great for many convenience stores whose tobacco sales can add up to 40 percent of their business, Sibor said.

The Collaborative has also worked with individual towns' boards of health to bring about tougher smoking regulations including smoke-free schools, municipal buildings and vehicles, bans on cigarette vending machines in restaurants and on free-standing cigarette displays in stores. Many towns have restaurants that are either 75 percent non-smoking or smoke-free and some communities have resorted to tobacco permitting to keep area merchants in compliance with the law.

Vastly improved rates of compliance show that the Collaborative has made great strides in helping to enforce a law that is designed to keep young people from getting hooked on smoking or other tobacco products.

"Our compliance rates have gone up incredibly," Sibor said, adding "when we first started we had to buy a lot of cigarettes (during stings) and that gets expensive."

In communities like Cohasset, Sibor said many of the regulations the collaborative has helped foster in other towns were already in place. Tobacco permitting for vendors has been in place for more than a year as have regulations keeping municipal buildings smoke-free and prohibiting cigarette vending machines. Merchant compliance has been high with a rate of 87 percent in the most recent check, but as high as 100 percent in an earlier sting.

"Cohasset's board of health has been very interested and very supportive of our efforts," Sibor said, adding "it's a town that is very interested in protecting and promoting good public health."

Cohasset's Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said he has and will continue to support the Collaborative's efforts and is disappointed to hear about the budget cuts.

"I think it's unfortunate that the legislature is not following the will of the voters who said in the referendum that the 25 cent tax will be used for tobacco control programs," Godzik said.

Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill agreed. Gill's supplemental health education programs funded through a Department of Education grant, which also gets revenues from the cigarette tax, have been cut. In fact, since starting the programs, which include peer education and peer leader groups as well as elementary health education and training programs to help teachers integrate health and tobacco education into their curriculum, Gill said he's seen four cuts bringing his annual grant from $48,000 to $28,000 this year. Gill will try to keep programming in place but will have to eliminate some staff.

While this year's cut only amounts to $4,000, Gill said it is a significant loss.

"It's a shame. For small schools like ours a few thousand is a big part of our budget," Gill said.

And while Cohasset does not have the DARE program, its similar "PALS" program in which police work with teachers to educate students about the hazards of drug use and how to handle peer pressure, will also be cut by about $2,000 this year.

Gill recalled joking with health educators hired through the grant and telling them that if they did too good a job, and everyone quit smoking there would be no cigarette tax to fund their jobs. But that isn't the reason for these cuts, said Gill.

"It's the politicians who keeping robbing the money from us," he said.

But at least one local legislator share's Gill's disappointment about the budget cut. State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, said while she herself is a smoker, she consistently has supported the work of tobacco control programs like the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative.

"I want to discourage young people from smoking," Murray said, adding "I'm not in favor of cutting this at all."

Murray commended the strides the Collaborative has made in all 14 of its member towns and said she will try to get the funding back in place.

"Dawn and her group have done a marvelous job. We really shouldn't cut programs like this," she said.

Community blood drive planned

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Sept. 18. The Red Cross Bloodmobile will be at Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main St., from 2 to 7 p.m. Babysitting assistance will be provided after 3 p.m.

New donors are welcome and needed. To make an appointment for donating at a specific time, or for further information, call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290.

School board to reach out to town

Comment boxes are suggested

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

Keeping in line with plans discussed as the school year wound down last May, school committee members are gearing up for improved communication with the public as a new school year begins.

In April, school committee members touted the importance of better communication with townspeople and discussed dubbing this year "The Year of Dialogue."

During the Aug. 29 meeting members discussed tackling the large task piece by piece.

"We ought to start with something very basic," said School Committee Member James Kirk, who serves on the communications subcommittee with member JoAnne Chittick. "We ought to start with listening."

He suggested that "comment/question" boxes be placed in public buildings throughout town.

People could write their thoughts down on specially designed forms that would be placed beside the boxes.

Writers could also put down how they would like their input addressed. They could be contacted personally or the comment could be discussed at a school committee meeting.

As a pilot project, Schools Supt. Stephen Hart suggested placing the boxes in the schools or in his office. Then any kinks, such as the wording of the form, could be worked out.

At earlier meetings, each member was given a group or groups to concentrate their energies on.

Focus groups include: teachers and staff, town boards, parents, students, local businesses, the Parent Student Organization, the media, and service organizations.

Committee members would then share what they learned, or questions they were asked, at their regular meetings.

Although a working dialogue with different groups in and outside the school system was discussed earlier this year, the events of the summer seemed to underscore its importance.

"There has been a lot of water over the dam," said Kirk.

Internet policy established

The school board iscussed the new Internet policy last week. The policy states that the school department believes that knowledge of the Internet is fundamental to success in the information age and integral to the curriculum. The policy also states that since "not all material available on the Internet is of educational value," guidelines have been set.

Parents and students are required to read the guidelines and sign the policy. If guidelines are not followed Internet privileges may be revoked. Unacceptable uses include: giving out your password, vandalism, copying software and providing personal information such as your name, phone number or address.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Big Top is gone, a sign of summer's end

Goodbye, summer! The true summer sign, South Shore Music Circus, is gone for the year! They did have to take down the tent in a bit of a hurry, thanks to Hurricane Edouard, but all is well, and we all look forward to next year.

Kudos to Vince Longo and his able crew for providing the town with another year full of outstanding entertainment. We also thank you for "the use of the hall" during the two Town Meetings! Where we would have gone, what we would have done — never mind, you were admirable! The Town of Cohasset says thanks!

Speaking of summer and the weather that goes with it, does Ron Rawson always come to mind during a storm? Did you know he was directly responsible for the wall at Sandy Beach that will keep water out of Nichols Road — the same water that used to float all of Atlantic Road in front of the beach? If you knew the gentleman, be glad! If you did not, be thankful he had the foresight to protect our beach and keep everything "natural." And thank you Ron (and Ruth) for all your years of dedication to the town!

Ooops! We forgot to wish Helen and Al Livingston a happy anniversary. The big day was Sept. 2! We are not sure of the years to be celebrated, just that we are happy for every single one! Congrats!

One anniversary we are sure of is Ruth and Carlton Pratt's, who celebrated their 55th Sept. 4. Can you just imagine? They're such a perfect couple to be together for that long — yes!

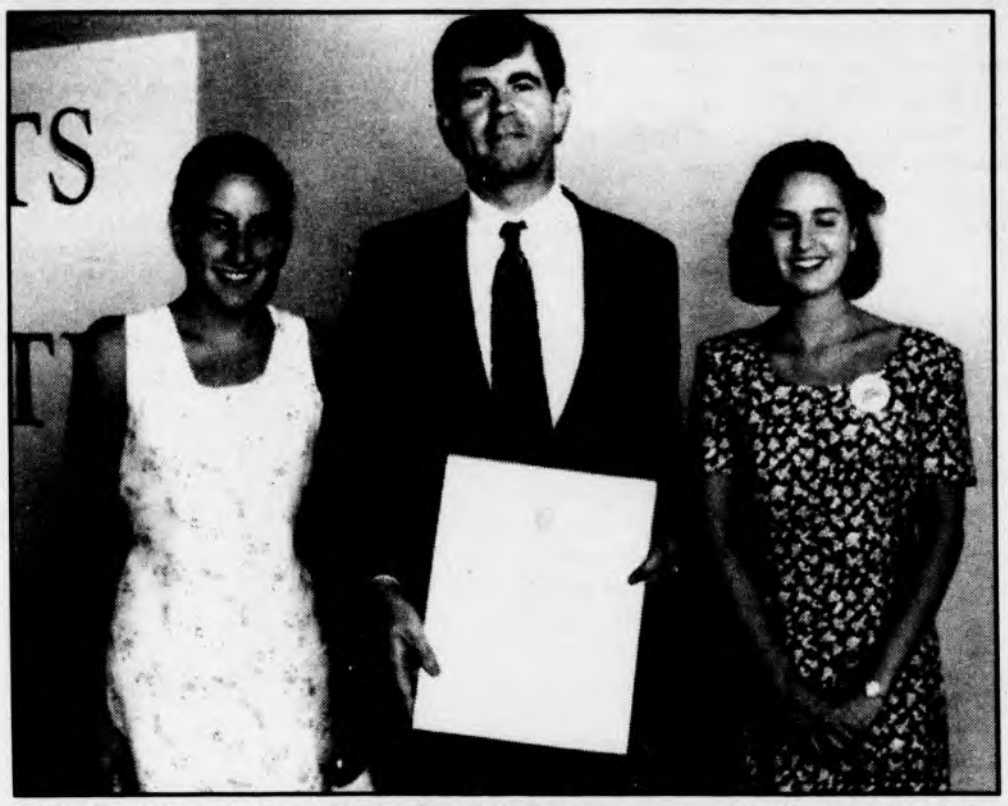
On to more special events. This time it's the birthday of one of Cohasset's best ladies, Babe Trott, who will be 93 this Saturday, Sept. 7. If she isn't one special lady, who is? She has always done so much for so many, and we all remember every single thing and thank her for all of it! We wish her a happy day!



Julie Smith and Jane Flaherty of Cohasset pose with Secretary of the Commonwealth, William F. Galvin, at the State House tours volunteer luncheon. This event was an opportunity to recognize student volunteers for their outstanding service as volunteer State House Tour Guides this summer.

Jeepers, creepers! It is time to feel a little older, folks! Remember when I told you about Lauren Wood and her skating prowess? She always was (and is) awesome. That same Lauren just graduated from Mass. General with a master's degree in communication sciences and disorders. Now, for you folks who may not remember, Lauren is one more gal all Cohasset residents should be proud of. She is working at the Anne Sullivan Early Intervention Program in North Andover.

Now is the time to plan ahead. Gosh, so much is going on in September! First of all, be sure you attend the Alumni Field opening this Sunday, Sept. 8, and if you are representing your class, remember to bring your "flag." Don't know how many have been uup there in the last couple of weeks, but it is trul a tribute to all who worked so hard to make dreams become reality! There is only one worry. All of the men and women who wanted to play on a field under lights at Cohasset may be a smidgeon jealous. Don't worry. Pretend that is you out there when you watch your favorite game, and pat yourself on the back for being part of the great new complex!

Did you know that the 15th of September is going to be a special one at South Shore Community Center? They are honoring Grandparents Day from 1:30 to 2:45 p.m. There will be a magic show and an ice cream social. Adults are free, and children pay $1.50 each.

It is suggested you pick up tickets in advance — everyone must have a ticket because of limited space. Come on and see the fast-paced magic/variety show! To add a special touch to the day, there will be a make-your-own-sundae party with Ben and Jerry's ice cream. Tickets for the event, which promises to be the best until the Halloween Parade, may be purchased at the center. Be sure to call 383-0088.

Ann Dane, a freshman majoring in biology at the University of Rochester, has been named to the spring dean's list for academic achievement. Our hats are off to you, Ann. We are sure we will be penning your good work in the future!

Have you noticed the great big smiles on the faces of Thomas and Diane McMahon? Would you like to know the reason? Her name is Emily Rose McMahon, born July 29 at 6:13 p.m., weighing in at 8 pounds, 10 ounces. You know that her paternal grandparent, Christene Cummings Lavallee is just as happy as anyone can be. You also know that Emily Rose will be spotted around town often!

Okay, everyone. Summer is officially over, and we all want to hear about yours! Or anything! Even about the kiddo who left the nest for college. Please call!

Reflections on Labor Day

Over the years, the topic of work has inspired plenty of reflections from a remarkable variety of sources, ranging from the Bible to a Nobel Prize winner for literature to one of our most controversial presidents.

"Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is," according to 1 Corinthians 3:13.

"You can't eat for eight hours a day nor drink for eight hours a day nor make love for eight hours a day," wrote William Faulkner. "All you can do for eight hours is work, which is the reason why man makes himself and everybody else so miserable and unhappy."

In 1971, Richard Nixon declared, "The work ethic holds that labor is good in itself; that a man or woman becomes a better person by virtue of the act of working. America's competitive spirit, the work ethic of its people, is alive and well."

A far less lofty perspective was taken by journalist Studs Terkel in the introduction to his 1974 book "Working."

"This book, being about work, is, by its very nature, about violence to the spirit as well as the body," wrote Terkel. "It is about ulcers as well as accidents, about shouting matches as well as fistfights, about nervous breakdowns as well as kicking the dog around. It is, above all (or beneath all), about daily humiliations."

Terkel added, "To survive the day is triumph enough for the walking wounded among the great many of us. The scars, psychic as well as physical, brought home to the supper table and the TV set may have touched, malignantly, the soul of our society, more or less."

To be sure, Terkel mentioned what he called "the happy few who find a savor in their daily jobs," such as "the Indiana stonemason who looks upon his work and sees that it is good; the Chicago piano tuner who seeks and finds the sound that delights; the bookbinder who saves a piece of history; and the Brooklyn fireman who saves a piece of life."

It's astonishing to note that long before "downsizing" became one of the most feared and loathed words in the American vocabulary, Terkel suggested that the time may have arrived to, as he put it, "redefine the work ethic and reclaim the idea from the banal men who invoke it."

The comments made by Ralph Helstein, then-president emeritus of the United Packinghouse Workers of America, are as thoughtprovoking today as they were over two decades ago.

"Learning is work," Helstein told Terkel. "Caring for children is work. Community action is work. Once we accept the concept of work as something meaningful, not just the source of a buck, you don't have to worry about finding enough jobs. The problem is going to come in finding enough ways for man to keep occupied so that he's in touch with reality. Our imaginations have obviously not yet been challenged."

We hope that you enjoyed Labor Day. We also hope that you're one of what Terkel called "the happy few."

Charter school may branch out

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Heading into its second year in business, several significant back-to-school changes are in store for the area's newest public charter school.

The Hull-based South Shore Charter School is expanding both its primary and secondary schools, doubling its enrollment, and looking into setting up a satellite campus in Brockton.

According to Timothy Anderson, the public school's founder and headmaster, having a satellite campus has always been part of the South Shore Charter School plan.

"Part of our mission is to disseminate the model were developing," Anderson said.

And one of Anderson's goals is to bring minorities into the school.

With a four percent minority student population, the South Shore Charter School is more diverse than all of the surrounding public schools, but Anderson said he wants that number to be higher and more reflective of today's world. The addition of an exchange program with students from Russia and South America attending SSCS this year is one way the school is adding diversity; the satellite school is another.

"We want to be as much like the world as possible for our kids," Anderson said.

The Nehemiah Life Development Center, a Brockton educational group offering after-school and Saturday school programs, job training and counseling, is interested in joining forces with SSCS for the satellite school, which, if approved, could be accommodated at the campus of one of SSCS's college partners, Massasoit Community College.

With all 25 original charters approved through the 1993 Education Reform Act used, and petitions for six additional charters on a waiting list, being part of SSCS as a satellite school could be the Nehemiah Life Development Center's best shot at the charter school experience, Anderson said.

"Many are hoping that within a year or two the legislature will lift the ceiling on the number of charters allowed," Anderson said.

If it were approved, the satellite charter school campus would be the first of its kind in the state. At this point, Anderson said state education officials have not determined whether satellite's will be allowed or how they could be established.

Another option for the Nehemiah Life Development Center which currently uses space in a local church for instruction, is becoming a pilot school of the Brockton public school system, Anderson said. This would allow them to follow charter school models and principles while still being governed by the local school committee and a part of the Brockton school department.

But the satellite campus plan has benefits for both SSCS and the Nehemiah Life Development center, could strengthen the Massasoit Community College affiliation, Anderson noted.

All 25 approved charter schools will open across the Commonwealth this year, giving families another education choice, and with non-traditional curricula and innovative teaching methods, serving as "research and development labs for other public school systems," Anderson said.

At the South Shore Charter school project-based and student-paced learning, along with active parental and community involvement, set the curriculum apart from that of other public schools. Students help shape the school's curriculum, work with teachers to design personal education plans and take an active role in SSCS's governing bodies.

With 94 percent of last year's student body returning and enrollment expected to more than double to 350 students this year, Anderson is riding high on the young school's early success.

And surrounding school districts are keeping a careful eye on the charter school and the effects it could have on not only their student populations but also their budgets.

State legislation for the charter schools requires that tuition dollars follow the students, which means some school districts will lose not only students but also state education (Chapter 70) dollars. In the last two fiscal years, the majority of South Shore school districts saw 100 percent reimbursements in state aid, but legislators warn that the state will not continue to pick up the tab forever.

In Cohasset, 15 local students are bound for the South Shore Charter School this fall.

Cohasset, one of two South Shore schools above the state's complicated education foundation figure, saw only a 50 percent reimbursement in state aid this year, but Supt. of Schools Stephen Hart said additional state aid this year helped softened the charter school blow. Without reimbursement, and with a per pupil cost of more than $5,400, Cohasset could see a more than $80,000 cut in Chapter 70 aid in future years.

Under current legislation, Cohasset will be weaned off state reimbursements, receiving 40 percent this year, and 30 percent next year. No reimbursements planned beyond fiscal year 1998.

But Hart is hoping state legislators will push for another way to fund the charter schools.

"If the state wants to support that type of educational program, they should be paying for it. It shouldn't be funded out of town and school budgets," Hart said.

Since 1966 • Affiliated Shaolin Temple, Dengfeng, China

Jade Forest is the south shore's oldest and finest Kung Fu training facility. We are committed to teaching each student how to use Kung Fu or Tai Chi as valuable life tools. SIFU John C. Loupos has been teaching martial arts here on the south shore since 1968 and as such brings his wealth of experience to your training curriculum. He personally oversees the training development of each and every student.

The curriculum at Jade Forest is multi-faceted. In addition to our core program in the Praying Mantis Style of Kung Fu, programs are also available in Tai Chi Chuan, meditation/stress management, and Chi Kung energy work. Jade Forest has a program to meet your schedule. Nearly 20 group classes each week are offered, both mornings and evenings. Private instructions as well as group classes are available.

Jade Forest instruction is personalized. Whether in the children's or adult's program every student has his/her own agenda. We strive to make your Kung Fu experience an enjoyable one; useful and relevant to YOU! ... whether your goals are exercise and getting in shape, self defense, weight loss, or a cardiovascular workout emphasizing mind/body coordination.

Jade Forest Praying Mantis Kung Fu is a classical Chinese martial art that remains fundamentally unchanged since its origin at the Shaolin Temple 350 years ago.

Jade Forest Kung Fu is a whole body, energetic exercise that develops coordination, flexibility, and strength. Hidden within its fluid and graceful movement is the powerful framework of a traditional martial art.

An ongoing practice in Jade Forest Kung Fu enables the student to develop self-discipline and self-respect, the foundation of mental, physical, and emotional health and peace of mind.

Jade Forest Kung Fu is suitable for both men and women of all ages. Class is taught at three levels: Adult, 14 years and over; Juniors, 10-13 years; and Children 6-9 years. SIFU John Loupos has had occasion to study at the Shaolin Temple and at other sites in China. He is also trained in Shaolin, Choy Lay Fut, and Bagua, and is certified as an Advanced Instructor in the Healing Tao System.

■ Tai Chi Chuan at Jade Forest

Tai Chi Chuan is a form of Chinese martial arts noted for the slow motion manner in which its exercise routines are practiced, (5-30 minutes or more). Millions of people practice it each morning in China (and now here as well!) for its health benefits (typically indicated for back problems, high blood pressure, stress, arthritis, and knee problems). Tai Chi can help you relax and get more out of life by blending the slow motion, highly stylized moves of the body with a relaxed, introspective frame of mind.

Our 'short form' class is perfect for beginning students. This routine is very easy to learn and practical as well. It is characterized by its short length (approx. 7 minutes to practice), and also by the small amount of space it requires (only about 5x5 feet), making it ideal for integration into a busy lifestyle. Entry level students begin with this short form, and may advance to the longer form as their skill level improves.

Tai Chi Chuan, as a moving meditation, is ideal for those seeking a more mindful, less jarring, non-competitive form of movement and exercise. It is as an oasis from the demands of modern life and provides an optimal approach to balancing your body while you relax your mind and calm your spirit.

■ Meditation

Meditation+ has become increasingly popular, and is recognized and accepted today for a wide range of health benefits. Its practice is now commonly incorporated into western hospital and therapeutic environments. Individual meditation techniques, however, can vary widely depending on their origin. In the Taoist tradition meditation is regarded as both calming and energizing, this due to the manner in which the Taoist approach opens the body's energy channels to circulate Chi (life force energy) for a true body/mind balance...a perfect adjunct to our Tai Chi classes.

+Now enrolling for our next Taoist Meditation Workshop. Scheduled for Sunday, Sept. 29, 9 a.m - 2 pm. Beginners welcome. Call for more information.

Cycling tours benefit hospice

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

There aren't enough good things Rockland's Richard Jones can say about the South Shore Hospice.

Hospice workers took care of his mother, Louise, when she was terminally ill with cancer. They also made his father, James, comfortable during his final days when, he too, was dying from the disease a year ago.

South Shore Hospice, a program of the South Shore Hospital, helps patients who are in the final stages of illness live their remaining months surrounded by friends and family in the familiar surroundings of their own home.

With a staff including nurses and home health aides, along with the services of nurses, doctors, homemakers and free support and bereavement groups, the hospice provided care to more than 525 families last year alone.

The hospice, Jones said, not only gave the care his parents needed, but helped them keep their dignity as well.

"They're extremely magnificent people — sensitive and caring," Jones said of the hospice workers. "There's not enough good adjectives to describe the work they do.

"My parents got plenty of respect and were able to die in the home they lived in for 50 years."

So, instead of words, Jones showed his appreciation through his actions.

The second annual Bicycle Tour for the Hospice of the South Shore, which drew 35 cyclists a year ago, is scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 19.

The tour begins at the Cornerstone Office Building on Hingham St. in Rockland and traverses rural areas of some of the South Shore's most scenic communities

The event consists of two tours, a 50- and 100-mile ride.

The 100-mile tour begins at 7 a.m. and heads through the towns Norwell, Scituate, Marshfield and Plymouth before joining up with the 50-mile cyclists at the Halifax Country Club.

Fifty-mile cyclists set out at 9 a.m. and cover the same towns as those on the longer tour until peeling off into Halifax. From there, they head down Route 58 and over to Route 14.

Jones said the October date will provide cooler temperatures and the chance to get a first-hand look at the sights and colors of the South Shore in autumn.

"It goes by a lot of cranberry fields," Jones said. "It's a nice time of year for a ride."

Last year, a field of 35 riders raised $5,000, every cent of which went to the hospice. Jones is "anticipating" somewhere in the neighborhood of 60 cyclists this year, but would like to see the number creep closer to 100.

EXTRA POINTS/Joe Reardon

Linemen are a quarterback's best friend

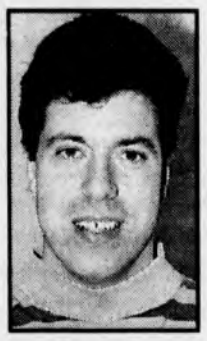
Football coaches can't emphasize enough just how important a summer regiment of running and lifting is if players expect to improve on the field.

And you know what? The players are listening. And they're listening in a big way, judging by the builds they have at the start of the football season.

Players aren't lifting for the sake of looking good for the girls when they hit the beach. That's just an added luxury as a result of endless situps, bench presses, curls, squats, pushups and flys.

High school football players aren't dumb. They realize in order to compete against big, opposing athletes they have to get physically stronger.

The equipment is there, but more importantly, the motivation to get bigger and stronger burns stronger than a lifter's 16th bench press.



Reardon

The endurance factor also comes into play. With the large number of two-way players, weights and running become that much more important. Players stand more of a chance at getting injured because they're on the field twice as long as usual.

And you can bet getting knocked around, sustaining hard hits and giving all-out performances are all particularly fatiguing. Strong legs become that much more critical. Players, especially running backs and linemen, push off their legs to gain momentum while trying to knock the opposing player away from the ball.

Take a look at the NFL. Name the best quarterbacks then look at the size of players in front of them. Remember the "Hogs" from the two-time Super Bowl winning Washington Redskins team? That offensive line was as solid as a rock and they provided the protection quarterbacks Doug Williams and Mark Rypien needed to get their passes off.

Back to high school. I've always hated the term "Muscle Heads" when referring to guys who dedicate themselves to lifting and building up their bodies.

Do people actually realize how much time and energy it takes to get a chiseled build. And that's on top of football practice. To avoid injuries coaches have them doing the proper weight and stretching exercises. I may be wrong, but except for a few exceptions, the high school athletes on the whole are far bigger than athletes were when I was in high school.

It should be interesting to see just how the offensive and defensive lines do this season in moving their opponents off the ball. While the quarterbacks, receivers and running backs capture the majority of the fame, the linemen are in the trenches making their jobs that much easier.

And the stronger they are, the less likely it is for a quarterback to wind up flat on his back.

Here's to the least appreciated players on the field. That is, except for the quarterback's unconditional gratitude towards them.

Keep on pumping the iron!

Cycling tours

Still, he knows many events have had humble beginnings and eventually grew. He cited the Sturbridge-to-Provincetown fund-raising cycling tour as an example.

"That ride started out with 40 the first year, then 60 before becoming a huge event," Jones said.

Jones will be taking part in the event as well. An avid biker, his mileage was down from the 4,000 he put in last summer after being struck by a car during a training ride.

He escaped serious injury, but the separated shoulder Jones sustained was enough to keep him from riding for 10 weeks.

Jones had a fairly productive summer on the bike despite his injury. He still managed to log an impressive 1,800 miles, enough to make him well prepared for the tour.

The entry fee for the tour is $25 and cyclists are asked to gather a minimum of $100 in pledges.

Certified bicycle mechanics from Bicycle Junction in Pembroke have volunteered for the second year in a row to assist cyclists throughout the route with any problems they have with their bikes.

To obtain a registration form and further information on the cycling tour, call (617) 878-1228.

Anyone interested in volunteering to hand out water and orange slices at any one of the six aid stations should also call.

Back to School

Every child deserves a first-class education. The Legislature, under the Education Reform Act, tried to address inequities in the system, but ended up pleasing no one. Public-school systems worry about losing funds to the Charter Schools; parents in both systems worry that their kids will wind up with even fewer resources in this educational tug-of-war.

It's time the Legislature came up with a fair – and dependable – formula for funding public education.

If I'm elected to the State Senate, ensuring quality education – from prekindergarten through college – will be among my very top priorities. The kids – and parents – of the Plymouth & Norfolk District deserve no less.

How to exorcise the IRS's demon audits

By Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

The IRS is getting quite a whupping these days. Congress now wants to chop the agency's annual budget by 10.5 percent after a series of hearings revealed the IRS squandered $4 billion of taxpayer money due to sloppy mismanagement of its computer modernization.

In its announcement of these cuts, YOUR MONEY'S WORTH one message came through loud and clear: Congress told the IRS to stop conducting its invasive "lifestyle audits" in which the agency tries to uncover discrepancies between taxpayers' returns and their "economic lifestyles," meaning, how taxpayers spend their money.

Does that mean taxpayers tagged for an audit can breathe easier knowing that the IRS won't be picking through their every last intimate financial detail?

No.

"For years now, the IRS has been conducting these lifestyle audits in many variations and will continue to do so," several Manhattan IRS auditors and agents told me. "They're just calling them by another name."

So, if you're one of the unlucky million or so who get an audit notice from the IRS during the year, you can still expect to undergo a computer-aided examination of your personal life — the so-called economic reality audit.

Taxpayers rarely win during an audit — about 87 percent of all audited taxpayers end up owing additional taxes and penalties.

That's because the IRS typically amasses a boatload of information on taxpayers before it even sits down to conduct an audit. The IRS will hunt for economic-reality clues before the audit by tapping the records of the Social Security Administration; banks; divorce, probate, and bankruptcy courts; and insurance agencies. It will also examine employer personnel records, subscriber-information services, and newspaper articles. An IRS agent will then interview anyone with any knowledge about your finances, including landlords, employees, employers, ex-spouses, and even neighbors.

Here's how taxpayers who receive audit notices should prepare:

Don't show. Ignore IRS notices that say, "You will be present at the initiation of the audit." Such demands are in violation of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights, a federal law. As with other audits, "it is not mandatory for the taxpayer to be present at an audit," says IRS spokesman Don Roberts.

Instead, hire a tax pro with extensive audit experience to help assemble your documentation and represent you at the audit. Consider enrolled agents, who typically are ex-IRS agents.

Treat your auditor with respect. Eight New York City IRS auditors and agents told me that taxpayers can make their audits easier by adhering to this simple rule.

Don't be intimidated. Don't answer questions such as, "What cash did you have on hand in 1993 usually, personally, or for business, not in a bank, in a safe deposit box, or hidden somewhere?" Says Michael Knight, a CPA in New Canaan, Conn.: "By law both the CPA and the IRS must shut down the audit when these questions are asked, because they can lead to civil or criminal fraud inquiries."

Don't be nervous, and don't be a jerk. Auditors are trained "to create silence." They often examine records without speaking, with the hope that taxpayers will volunteer information. You can request a delay at any time in order to seek help.

Be honest. IRS examiners are trained to ask for information they already have in order to test credibility. Also, auditors keep a daily log.

If you lose, appeal. Auditors use scads of cost-of-living data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics to see if reported income matches residential profiles. However, critics, including Federal Reserve chairman Alan Greenspan, say these statistics are inflated. If you don't sign the audit-adjustment agreement, your case will automatically go to an IRS appeals officer. The average appeal results in a 40 percent decrease in taxes, penalties, and interest. In fact, you may not owe a dime; IRS statistics show that about one in five audited returns had nothing wrong with them.

(Elizabeth MacDonald is financial editor at Worth magazine.)

Girl Scouts will register Daisies, Brownies, Juniors, Cadettes and Seniors. Boy Scouts will accept sign-ups for Tigers, Cub Scouts and Webelos.

The Teen Center will also be open Saturday, Sept. 7, from 7 to 10 p.m.

White-collar crime is topic

On Thursday, Sept. 5, host Wigmore Pierson's guest on "Pierson to Person" will be Tracy A. Minor, a litigation attorney with a major Boston law firm, who specializes in complex civil and criminal matters, including grand jury, pre-trial and trial.

Minor, who has represented a number of well-known Boston-area politicians and other professionals, will discuss white-collar crime. She is a summa cum laude graduate of Boston College Law School and was a writer and editor of the Boston College Law Review.

The show is broadcast live each Thursday from 8 to 9 p.m. from the North Scituate studio of Continental Cablevision. The program airs on Channel 53 in Hingham and Channels 3 and 53 in Cohasset.

The public is invited to be part of the studio audience. Those planning to attend should be at the studio on Gannett Road by 7:30 p.m.

For information, call Executive Producer Robert Belliveau at 545-2500.

Chamber music concert, Sept. 14

A special evening of chamber music will be presented Saturday, Sept. 14, at 8 p.m. at Broad Cove House, Hingham, by the Broad Cove Players. The group of musicians, who have accompanied Broad Cove Chorale and the Unicorn Singers over the years, have again joined forces to present a concert to benefit the organization and provide the audience with a varied program.

A champagne reception will follow the concert, which will display the talents of the six instrumentalists and a vocal quintet. Music by Mozart, Schumann, Milhaud, Dvork and Ibert will be performed.

The Broad Cove Players include Cheryl Ange, flute; Muriel Bledsoe, clarinet; Turner Bledsoe, oboe; Roger McClentic, bassoon; Annalisa Peterson, French horn; and Allen Balsbaugh, piano.

All seats for the concert are reserved, with a donation of $15 payable in advance. As a complement to an end-of-summer supper party, tickets may be booked at a special $10 per person rate for parties of six or more whose donation is received by Tuesday, Sept. 10.

Call 749-6561 for more information. Mail checks payable to Broad Cove Chorale to 66 Lincoln St., Hingham 02043.

Harbour Choral members are sought

The Harbour Choral Arts Society invites South Shore singers to participate in three open rehearsals, Mondays, Sept. 9, 16 and 23, at Lutheran Church of the Cross, Hanover, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Formal auditions for the concert choir are not required, but a commitment to weekly rehearsals and musical excellence are expected.

Auditions will be held for the newly formed Chamber Choir, scheduled to sing at the society's December concert and also at Quincy's First Night celebration Dec. 31. Chamber Choir singers must be active members of the Harbour Choral Arts Society.

The group's winter concert will consist of Haydn's "Missa Sancti Nicolai" and a set of seasonal pops numbers, including a round for choir and audience and a "Nutcracker"-inspired setting of "Jingle Bells."

The society is in its ninth year and their fourth under the direction of voice teacher and operatic baritone John Weiss.

For further information about rehearsals, Harbour Choral Arts Society or the new chamber choir, call Sue Stewart at 337-5491.

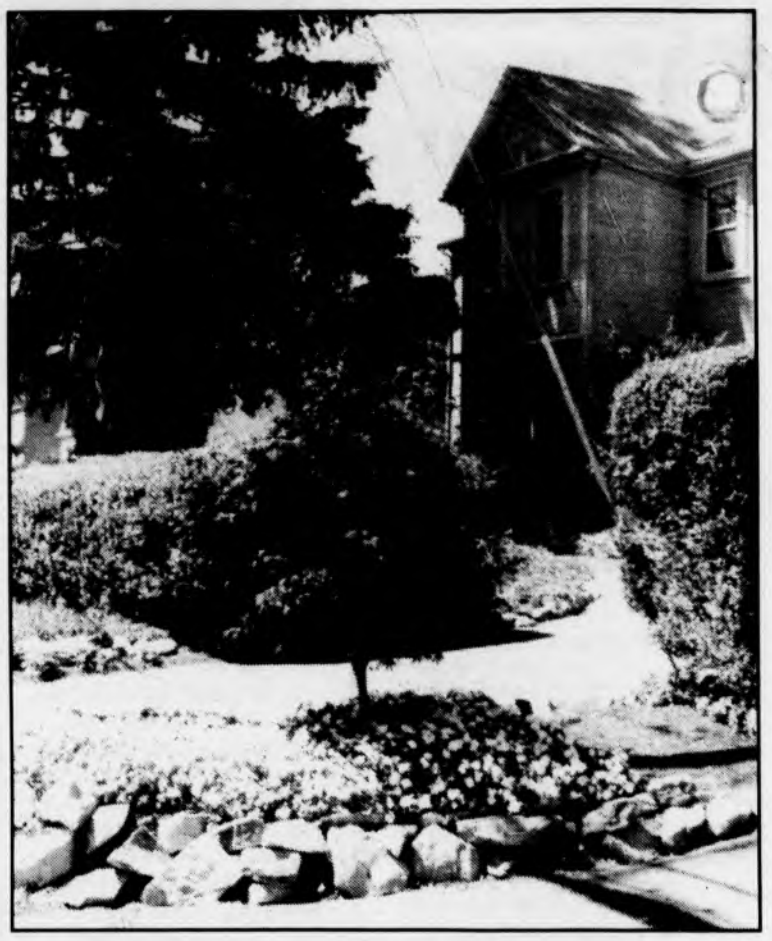
The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863



Pete Flaherty, owner and one of the occupants of the condos in his restored colonial at 108-110 Elm St. has planned and planted his grounds to the delight of all. The tree-belt border first caught my eye with its bright planting of deep fuchsia impatiens, purple alyssum, pale lavender pansies and deep, leathery, green periwinkle leaves. Two red Japanese maples with under-plantings of white impatiens flank either side of the tree-belt border. As you walk on the curving brick pathway, you enter a 'Secret Garden' filled with delights. Red and white impatiens border curving beds and gravel pathways where one can stop, sit on the many benches or wooden swing, and watch the birds feed at the feeding station that Pete has created complete with L.L. Bean thermometer, lobster traps and driftwood for just the right seaside touch. White impatiens border a flagstone path leading to a side patio, home to a cement bench with plantings of purple alyssum and yellow pansies leading to more beds and plantings on the rear of the property. It is evident that these grounds have been planted and maintained by Pete as a labor of love. A true gardener, Pete has created a lush, serene garden hidden behind his tall, manicured boxwood hedges.

Unenrolled may sit this one out

Group makes up majority of Cohasset voters

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

In Cohasset registered Republicans edge Democrats slightly, by 1,142 to 1,074 — but with 2,960, the unenrolled make up the lion's share of the town's 5,183 registered voters. There are seven registered Libertarians in town.

With 22 percent, though, Cohasset — often touted as a Republican stronghold by outsiders — does have more than the state average of 14 percent registered voters opting for the G.O.P. Democrats number about 38 percent statewide (but only 20 percent in Cohasset) with independents making up 48 percent (57 percent in town).

If absentee ballots are a gauge, Town Clerk Marion Douglas says the turnout for Tuesday's state primary will be low. A week before the primary, only 19 citizens had voted absentee.

Polls will be open from 7 a.m to 8 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall.

But the election is generating excitement among Democrats, says Democratic town and state committee member Fred Koed of Spring Street.

Cohasset Alumni Field dedication attracts all ages

Football opener Friday night under the lights

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

When the Cohasset High varsity football team takes it water break during practice, the players look down from the hill where the practice field is located and head coach Bob Knurek can just imagine what they are thinking.

Below them is the new Cohasset Alumni Field, which the Skippers will play on for the first time this Friday night at 7 p.m. against East Bridgewater.

Knurek knows the players are picturing themselves sacking the opposing quarterback or running for long touchdown in front of a rabid crowd of hometown fans.

"It's absolutely great," Knurek said on Sunday during the ribbon-cutting ceremony at the field. "Friday night football is great. The atmosphere brings the excitement up to an whole other level.

Knurek was just one of 300 athletes, alumni, citizens and coaches who gathered for the hour-long dedication.

The school's fall varsity teams entered the stadium for a lap around the all-weather track, along with alumni from as far back as 1936.

Gary Vanderweil, a member of the last undefeated football team in 1957, and a driving force behind the facility, said it was the work of many who made the new field a reality.

"There are so many people who worked on this project," Vanderweil said, "it's impossible to thank everyone in the time constraints of this ribbon-cutting ceremony."

The project not only included a new field, which will be used for football, soccer, lacrosse and field hockey, but the relocation of four tennis courts, more fields at the Milliken site and a new baseball field.

Long jump, pole vault and shot put facilities were also part of the project.

Vanderweil singled out Wayne Sawchuk, who oversaw the project, and Athletic Director Clark Chatterton for their contributions.

"We wouldn't be here if it wasn't for his work," Vanderweil said of Chatterton. "Wayne had the hardest job of any of us. He had to get this job in on budget."

State Sen. Bob Hedlund and state Rep. Mary Jeanette-Murray presented certificates in acknowledgement of the work that went into the massive athletic facility project.

Gerard Keating, who captained the football team and graduated from Cohasset High School in 1937, carried the flag during the relay part of the ceremony and varsity soccer player Emily Henderson sang The Star Spangled Banner just as the lights were turned on.

Chatterton was elated with the project and the ceremony.

"We've been talking about this since I came on in 1968 and its finally become a reality," he said. "It's good to see

Water quality problems plague North Cohasset

Activists want town action

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Two familiar figures were back before selectmen this week.

North Cohasset residents, Maria Plante and Diane Sullivan, both of Jerusalem Road, asked the board to help get relief from a huge water rate hike levied by the private water company that serves that part of town.

With 100-year-old pipes bringing them water, the 300-plus homes served by Mass-American Water Company in North Cohasset are having to pay much more for an an inferior product, the women say.

In a dramatic presentation, Sullivan displayed a "snow white" blouse stained with yellow blotches from the same poor quality water that has left green slime in her bathtub.

62-acre Route 3A site is back on the market

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Just 16 months after a Dorchester construction firm purchased the former Webb-Norfolk Conveyer site in Cohasset, the 62-acre parcel is again for sale.

Mario Susi & Sons Construction bought the property, which sits off Route 3A across from Jonathan Livingston Plaza, in May 1995 for $1.3 million.

Currently assessed at $1,895,600, the site was formerly owned by the Jervis B. Webb Company, which for 30 years operated the Webb-Norfolk Conveyer plant, a company that produced motor-driven conveyers used by airports to move luggage and by other industries to move product lines. Webb-Norfolk closed its doors in December 1994, laying off more than 50 employees and relocating others to its Michigan headquarters.

Originally listed at $2.6 million, Susi & Sons own the property under the name Westwood Properties Limited Partnership and hope to sell it for $3.8 million. Susi & Sons could not be reached for comment.

Volunteers needed to sit on town boards

Interested citizens are needed to serve on the drug & alcohol committee, the mosquito control committee, the private ways committee, and the conservation commission, selectmen said. Please call the selectmen's office at 383-9900 for more information.

Dredging meeting tonight

The town engineer will meet with Selectman Peter Pratt and other town officials at 7:30 p.m., tonight (Sept. 12) at town hall to discuss the dredging of Cohasset Harbor. Pratt encouraged other town board members and the public to attend the meeting which will include discussion on proposed drying of dredged material on Government Island for three to four months prior to upland dumping at a secure landfill.

Pratt said Monday the $300,000 grant from the state (with $100,000 town match) should cover the cost of hydraulic dredging of the town portion of the harbor, and the drying out of and shipping the material to a landfill.

About $53,000 has been spent on engineering so far, Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said.

Pratt asked Doyon to work with town accountant Michael Buckley to come up with a "total rendering" of what has been spent so far by tonight's meeting.

Polluted material within the harbor, which is not suitable for ocean dumping, must be disposed of at inland landfills at a cost of about $100 to $120 per cubic yard.

Most of the town's harbor falls within federal jurisdiction. The Army Corps of Engineers is responsible for dredging about 90,000 cubic yards of silt material in the harbor's channel, a project expected to get underway by October of 1997.

Cohasset's Week

Former Deer Hill School principal has resigned

Donna Hartlage, who served as Deer Hill principal a year, has resigned and accepted a negotiated $30,000 settlement representing about 1/2 a year's salary, school officials said.

Hartlage, who was accused of striking a pupil during a photo shoot last May, had two years remaining on her contract.

Supt. Stephen Hart suspended Hartlage without pay following investigation of the allegations.

School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder said Tuesday that after further discussions and review of the facts it became clear that Hartlage was not going to be able to exercise the kind of leadership needed to move the school forward.

"To her credit, when this became clear, she resigned," Kidder said.

Paul Callahan of Hingham is the new principal at Deer Hill.

Cable TV irons out its telecast problems

Continental Cablevision program director Wendy Copithorne told selectmen this week that better training will ensure that all selectmen's meetings are televised live.

Cohasset selectmen's meetings, which are usually held on Monday evenings, are normally televised live on Channel 3. However, two meetings over the summer were not televised because of operating errors, Copithorne said.

She said Continental has a new technical assistant who will visit all 16 towns, which televise meetings, on the mornings before the telecasts to make sure all systems are ready to go.

Copithorne also reported that there were 13 volunteers and four cameras covering the special town meeting at the Music Circus last month.

Community blood drive is planned for Sept. 18

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Sept. 18. The Red Cross Bloodmobile will be at Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main St., from 2 to 7 p.m. Babysitting assistance will be provided after 3 p.m.

New donors are welcome and needed. To make an appointment for donating at a specific time, or for further information, call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290.

Congress post up for grabs Tuesday

By TOM HENSHAW
Cohasset Mariner

Nearly a full year after Cong. Gerry Studds threw in the sponge after 24 years, the voters of the 10th District will have a chance to narrow the choice of his successor to two.

Now, after such a long gestation period you'd think that a lot of excitement would be building up for the primary voting next Tuesday.

Apparently not.

Only 19 citizens had taken out absentee ballots in Cohasset — usually a gauge of voter interest — a week before the election. Voting hours, 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. at Town Hall.

The excitement next Tuesday clusters around both the Democratic and Republican races for the seat that Studds occupied for nearly a quarter of a century, since Richard Nixon was president.

Chief contenders for the Democratic nomination are Bill Delahunt, the Norfolk district attorney; Phil Johnston, the former state secretary of human services; and Ian Bowles, an environmentalist and first time candidate for office.

A fourth candidate, Walter S. Murray of Hull, has not made many ripples during the campaign.

On the Republican side. Ed Teague of Yarmouth, the the state house minority leader, is contesting with Bill Sargeant of Orleans, the son of former Gov. Frank Sargeant (1971-75).

A third Republican, Steven Pappas of Weymouth, has not been very active on the hustings.

Outside of Congress, the only contests on either ballot are for Norfolk County treasurer and for Governor's Council from the Fourth District.

Tim Cahill of Quincy, Gary Jones of Brookline, Mike Joyce of Braintree and John Vozzella of Walpole are seeking the Democratic nomination to face incumbent Republican treasurer Robert Hall.

Joe McEttrick of Milton is trying to unseat Chris Ianella Jr. on the Governor's Council. Both are Democrats.

The three major Democratic candidates for Congress represent the three major divisions of the district — the populous north, the far South Shore and the Cape and the islands.

The favorite to receive the Democratic nod is Delahunt, the 55-year-old veteran politician who lives in Quincy and whose career started on the City Council in 1971, progressed swiftly to the State House and finally to the DA's office in 1975.

He calls himself a "lunch pail" Democrat in the mold of Jim Burke and Brian Donnelly, who represented the northern corner of the district before it was combined with Studds' domain by the census of 1990.

One of Delahunt's most noted achievements as DA was the establishment of the first domestic violence unit in the nation in his office and the first sexual assault unit in the state.

He has been under attack for his refusal to revealed his income tax returns and his use of campaign funds for what his opponents claim are personal expenses, including dining in Bermuda and Boston Celtics tickets.

Johnston, 52, lives in Marshfield and represented his hometown in the state legislature from 1976 to 1984, then served Gov. Michael Dukakis as secretary of human services from 1984 to 1991.

He resigned his $100,000 a year post as the Clinton administration's New England director of the Department of Health and Human Services in January in order to run for Congress.

Johnston has campaigned hard on his record as an advocate for more human services, including better access to health care.

Bowles, 30, is from Falmouth (actually Woods Hole) on the Cape but has spent the last seven years in Washington, lately as vice president of the Conservation International Foundation. He left that job to run for office.

He went to Washington as a member of the staff of Cong. Claudine Schneider of Rhode Island, a environmental and women's advocate. He was her expert on foreign affairs, defense, housing and global environmental issues.

Bowles has never run for public office before and counts on his youth and record as an environmentalist to counter that political know-how of his adversaries, particularly on the ecologically sensitive Cape.

Teague, 46, hails from Yarmouth on the Cape and has represented the First Barnstable District since 1988. his rise in Republican ranks was swift. He became minority whip in the House in 1993 and minority leader in 1991.

A conservative, he stresses "fiscal responsibility," opposes abortion and gay rights, and has focused his campaign on bringing the federal deficit under control.

Sargent, 50, has homes in Charlestown and Orleans and is best known as a science writer, chiefly on environmental subjects.

Unopposed on their respective ballots are Republican Sen. Bob Hedlund and his Democratic challenger Bob Delahunt, a second cousin once removed to Bill, the Congressional candidate.

They'll face each other for the Plymouth Norfolk Sate Senate seat on Nov. 5.

Also unopposed are the Democratic county officials, Register of Probate Thomas Patrick Hughes of Quincy and Commissioners John Gillis of Quincy and Bill O'Donnell of Norwood.

Except for Treasurer Hall, there are no other Republican candidates for county office.

Mosquito board urges residents to guard against the EEE virus

Of concern to South Shore residents is the recent news that mosquitoes carrying the Eastern Equine Encephalitis virus have been found in considerable numbers in Westerly, Rhode Island. More recently, the virus has been detected in mosquitoes in three additional towns near the Massachusetts border.

The history of EEE on the South Shore indicates it is a relatively rare disease. According to Massachusetts Audubon Society's pamphlet on mosquitoes, "In Massachusetts, a total of 69 clinically confirmed human cases of EEE have been reported in the 52-year period between the first identified major human outbreak in 1938 (34 cases) and the 1990 season." For those who contract the disease, however, the neurological impact can be devastating, and approximately one third of the cases are fatal. Infants, young children and the elderly seem to be most susceptible.

Fortunately, the Massachusetts Department of Public Health monitors both the actual and probable presence of the EEE virus in local mosquito populations and releases timely information to the general public.

At this point, the Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee urges all Cohasset residents to take the following precautions:

• If you have areas of stagnant water on your property, either drain the areas or treat them with mosquito dunks available from hardware stores or garden center.

• Avoid outdoor activity during peak hours of mosquito feeding in the early morning and early evening.

• If an individual must be outside during these hours, wear long-sleeved shirts and long pants and use an insect repellent that includes DEET. Massachusetts Department of Public Health recommends a concentration of DEET of 10 percent or less for use on children and products with less than 30 percent for adults. DEET should never be used on infants.

For additional information, call the Cohasset Board of Health (383-9900, Ext. 121), Charles Gainor (383-0498) or the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project (617-585-5450 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.).

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes at 8 p.m. on their meeting nights to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda, selectmen said.

Special TM warrant to close

Selectmen will close the warrant for the Oc.t 28 Special Town Meeting at their meeting Monday (Sept. 16). Warrant articles must be submitted by Monday's meeting, they said this week.

Make up majority of Cohasset voters

"The turnout is a function of races," said Koed, who is also an election worker. "There is not state rep. race (in either party) and no senate primary race.

"The 10th Congressional race is the main reason people will come out to vote," he said.

There's a hot, three-way race between Bill Delahunt of Quincy, Phil Johnston of Marshfield, and Ian Bowles of Falmouth on the Democratic ballot. A fourth candidate, Walter Murray of Hull, provides another choice.

Long-time U.S. Congressman Gerry E. Studds, D-Cohasset, is not seeking another term.

Koed explained party members use the primary to pick the nominee of their party. He doesn't feel unenrolled voters, as a rule, pay as much attention to primary races and will look more closely at the candidates as the November election nears.

On the Republican side in the 10th Congressional race, voters will choose between Ed Teague of Yarmouth and Bill Sargent of Orleans with token opposition generated by Steven Pappas of Weymouth.

Republican town committee chairman Julie Guild said in her view the reason for the large number of unenrolled voters is a trend toward voting the person and not the party principles.

"People are more independent and don't want labels next to their names," she said.

Registrar, Judy Volungis, who is also a member of the Republican Town Committee said, although Tuesday's turnout may be low, there will be familiar faces.

"There is a certain number who vote in every election, no matter what — rain, hurricane or whatever."

Unenrolled voters must ask for a particular party's ballot Tuesday. After voting they must fill out a card to return to being unenrolled or they will remain registered in the party whose ballot they selected, Douglas explained.
